SOCIETY

CROSS-ROADS

By Faith Baldwin Sunlit paths and rain-black roads, beach that weds the moon, Mountain track and forest aisle, blushed green lanes in bloom— Take them in your careless stride, laughter in your eyes, When a cross-road halts your feet, be both warned and wise!

If you sold a tallman, you will know your way, Twist and turn revealed to you, open as the day, Stone nor bramble may not pierce dream-protected feet; Night shall not obscure your path, where the cross-roads meet.

Loves is like a magic wand, turning in your hand; It shall lead you faithfully, over sea and land.

All life's cross-roads can not veil which the destined trail; Dreams and love and laughter are guides which shall not fail. Never path but ends in Home, with such spells to guide, Take the colored ways of life in your careless stride; When the last cross-road of all bars your way with night, You shall find your own dim trail leading into light!

November 24, 1924, Memphis, Idaho. When I began to use Van De Sea my scalp was itching and sore. Used bottles for two years to control balance. My hair has uniformly increased in thickness and is now long and lustrous. Discarded all false hair last July. When combed, my natural hair appears abundant as when I wore wigs.
