This Business Of LIVING

by Susan Thayer LETTER TO A SOLDIER

Dear Johnny: I hear that certain people have been writing you whining letters full of stories of shortages and hardships here in the good old U. S. A.

ing you take over Italy, or any peacetime luxury, compared with the military equipment that's pouring in to you these days?

Maybe someone told you about the butter shortage, too. Well, for crying loud, why should we guzzle all the butter we want when there are more than a million hungry active men overseas and other millions in camp here?

There are other shortages, too, such as gasoline. That really does change things a bit, and there are hardships like crowded trains.

Meantime, Corporal Smith, don't worry one moment about your folks at home. And don't fret about what you'll come back to.

With affection and admiration, your friend and neighbor, (Signed) Susan Thayer.
