PLANTING PRESSURE

Planting season has begun and with it comes more intense physical activity, mental stress, and pre-sure. No matter how many planting seasons you've been through, you're always going to tense up at the start of a new one.

In 1982, with rising production costs and the very uncertain market costs and the very uncertain market situation, farmers will certainly have their fair share of stress. The U.S. National Institute on Occupational Safety and Health ranks farming in the top 10% of 130 jobs listed in order of their stress potential. This stress and pressure, if not alleviated, can lead to heart disease, cause nervous breakdowns, or can destroy a marriage.

downs, or can destroy a marriage.

Before stress reaches these points, you can take steps to prevent or relieve it. First, your family can be a strong support system, if you make use of it. During planting, farmers don't need anyone handing out advice. They do, however, need listeners or They do, however, need listeners or people to act as sounding boards. Farm families should keep in tight communications, especially during these times and should support one another. Sounds ridiculous, but sit down with everyone and plan when is the best time for meals and who will be there. Doctors say that we get 25% of our daily requirements at breakfast, so start the day with a full tank. Limiting coffee, colas, and tea, which are stimulates that aggravate stress, will help.
Also, if the body is out of shape it can not handle the pressures of stress; so do some sort of exercise at least once a day. Flexing and stretching in the field will keep you alert longer, as will short breaks off the tractor. No matter how busy you are, you should find a way to take 20 minutes a day to cool off and relax.

Another step to reduce stress is to set realistic goals. Farmers should differentiate between the factors they can control and the ones they can not. Also, develop a plan of action for dealing with the Stress is a part of farming but you can keep it at a minimum with a little thinking ahead. Start now to

ALL-RISK CROP INSURANCE

Agents for all-risk crop in-surance are now taking applica-tions on spring crops. Beginning with the 1982 crop year, federal disaster payments will not be made to producers for whom federal crop insurance is available.

Application deadlines for insurance are as follows: corn and cotton, March 31; tobacco (Type cotton, March 31; tobacco (Type 12, Eastern North Carolina, and Type 13, Border Belt), April 20; grain sorghum, soybeans and peanuts, April 30; tobacco (Type 11, Old and Middle Belts, and Type 31, burley), May 20.

All-risk crop insurance insures crops against all natural hazards, including adverse weather fire including adverse weather, fire, disease, insects and wildlife. The insurance protects the farmer's investment in his crops.

April 1982 has been proclaimed poultry and egg month in North Carolina. Today poultry and egg production plays a major role in the agricultural industry of North Carolina. In fact, the total annual poultry farm income for 1980 topped $760 million. Over-all, the poultry industry in North Carolina makes-up 23 percent of total agricultural farm income. That compares to tobacco's 32 percent As a food source the poultry and egg industry are equally important. Not only does the industry provide us with a nutritious high-quality food product, it also does it at an economical price. For example, in 1950 broilers sold for 59.5 cents per pound. Today biler prices are only slightly above that level. Let's not forget the important role of the poultry and egg business in our county. For example, turkeys are produced, grown, and slaughtered here in Hoke County. Each of these steps provides county residents with jobs. Also, the county's economy is in turn affected. So, let's all take a little time this month to ac-knowledge the importance of the industry to Hoke County and North Carolina. And while we do that we should also salute the industry, as a whole, for a job well done. LIVESTOCK MANAGEMENT

April management tips for Hoke County cattlemen are:

1. Plan for the pasture season: .Stocking rates.

...Fly control.

...Internal parasite control.
...Pasture for grazing or hay.
2. Watch for grass tetany in cowagrazing rapidely growing, lush green grasses.

...Provide supplemental magnesium with free choice minerals.

3. Maintain free choice minerals
