"Things That Matter"

SUMMERTIME'S ICE CREAM TIME

Summertime. And the living's not as easy as George Gershwin would lead us to believe. Where I live, summer brings unpredictable thunderstorms, steamy hot days, and sultry nights. And the skies become cesspools of horrid air pollution.

But there is one bright spot, even in the middle of all these gloomy prospects. Summertime is also ice cream time. A gallon of fresh strawberry homemade ice cream can make you forget an awful lot of summer misery.

Around our house, making homemade ice cream has developed into a fine art. Ingredients are always on hand, ready for instant use night or day. Just let someone in the family say, "Hey, let's make a freezer of ice cream!", and our well-trained crew springs into action. While my wife mixes up milk, sugar, eggs, and vanilla flavoring, I go to the freezer, grab a hunk of ice (frozen in plastic milk bottles), and start beating it into little pieces. We add mashed bananas, strawberries, or whatever other flavoring strikes our fancy, and, in ten minutes or less, our old faithful electric freezer is grinding away.

(We started out with a hand-cranked freezer, years ago. But, as any experienced ice cream maker knows, that kind works best when you have one of the children sit on it to hold it down. And our kids are too grown-up for that now. Hence, the new-fangled electric freezer.)

Homemade ice cream does have a few calories in it, of course. And that can be a bit of a problem. But this is negligible disadvantage, when you think of the many positive points in its favor. It saves money in two ways. First, it lowers the body temperature, when eaten in sufficient quantities, thus saving on air-conditioning costs. Second, it saves a lot of money that otherwise would be spent on trash foods. (Anyone who calls homemade ice cream "trash food" obviously isn't well-informed concerning the nutritional virtues of this wholesome confection.)

In addition, freezing ice cream at home promotes family togetherness and keeps kids off the streets. (No normal kid is silly enough to stay out on the streets when ice cream is in the making at home.) Besides, kids who eat homemade ice cream rarely, course, rebel against parents, or miss Sunday School.

Actually, summertime ought to be ushered in each year with a celebration of Marco Polo Day, in honor of the famous Venetian explorer who brought knowledge of ice cream from the Orient to Italy back in the early 14th century. Readily recognized as one of the great discoveries of modern times, the idea spread from Italy to France and other European countries, and finally to the United States. So, Marco deserves a lot of credit for making these hot summer months more endurable.

Rescue Squad Sponsoring Portrait Plan

The Hoke County Rescue Squad is sponsoring a family portrait project through Heritage Studios of Goldsboro as a means of raising money.

Representatives of Heritage Studios will be calling on families in this area for approximately two weeks assisting the Rescue Squad in selling a family portrait club plan certificate.

They will be offering a plan with which the customer will receive five 8 x 10 portraits to be used on each year for the next five years.

Profits from the sale of these club plan certificates will go to support the Rescue Squad. Purchase and use of one of these certificates will be appreciated.
