Puppy Creek Philosopher

Dear editor:
 Anybody familiar with the matter knows that farming is in financial trouble, just as any business would be when it's paying 1982 costs and getting 1932 income.
 You can get by paying a Congressman 1982 wages while getting 1932 results, but you can't do it farming. The government can spend more than it takes in and keep going, or at least it has for a long time now, but no agricultural experts have figured out how a farmer can. Small town bankers take a different view toward deficit financing than Washington.
 I can't say it'd be any comfort to a farmer trying to keep his head above water but I've just read about a tract of land that costs $50,000 an acre to operate and hasn't produced one salable commodity in years.
 The land is located in Washington, D.C. It's the 18 acres surrounding the White House. It takes 26 full-time employees at a cost of $900,000 a year to keep that piece of land in shape. That figures out to be $50,000 an acre.
 Farmers ought to send a delegation to Washington to try to figure out how it's done. If you can spend $50,000 an acre, not produce one penny of income, and still not get foreclosed on, you'd have the kind of information farmers have been needing for years.
 As for having 26 employees working 18 acres, which is not quite 7 tenths of an acre apiece, even a farm in the shape of this one out here could get by on a few less. Oh, it might take 26 for a few months to straighten things out, but after that I could cut back quite a few.
 Yours faithfully,
 J.A.
