Wolfe novel seminar topic

"Look Homeward, Angel - Thomas Wolfe's First Book," will be the topic of a Humanities Seminar to be held in Hoke County on Thursday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m. beginning April 5 and continuing each Thursday evening for a total of four weekly sessions. Professor James Clark of the English Department at North Carolina State University will conduct the seminar.

Participants will examine Look Homeward, Angel, Wolfe's apprenticeship novel in which his semiautobiographical hero, Eugene Gant, escapes his family and hometown.

Professor Clark will conduct the first and fourth sessions personally but will withdraw from the seminar during the middle two weeks in order to encourage discussion of the topic by the individuals themselves. These two sessions will begin with the presentations of a professionally produced videotape featuring Professor Emeritus/Wolfe specialist, Richard Walser.

Discussion questions for these sessions are provided by the professor at the first session. The seminar concludes with the return visit of the professor in the fourth week when they will answer all additional questions on the topic and discuss any additional material.

This Humanities Seminar is being sponsored by the North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service and the School of Humanities and Social Sciences at North Carolina State University.

Any person desiring to participate in the seminar should call Ellen Willis at the Hoke County Agricultural Extension Service, 875-3461 or 875-2162.

Deadline for registration is April 4.

There is no charge to the public. Any individual desiring a Continuing Education Unit (CEU) credit for attending the seminar is required to pay a $5 registration and transcript fee at the first session.

Teachers desiring credit for attending the seminar should contact their local school coordinator to determine if the seminar has been approved for teacher recertification.
