Burlington Boys' Choir to sing here Sunday

The Burlington Boys' Choir will present a program of sacred music Sunday, March 18 at 4 p.m. in the sanctuary of the Raeford Presbyterian Church. This group is the oldest organization of its kind in North Carolina to have been continuously sustained in training and performance. The choir consists of forty boys between the ages of eight and fourteen and was organized in 1959 by their present director, Miss Eva Wiseman.

There have been almost four hundred boys to have participated in the choir since its founding.

In December of 1983, the choir sang at the White House in celebration of their silver anniversary. This summer they will be singing in Japan as part of their tour.

The choir prepares three types of programs each year: Christmas, sacred, and secular. They rehearse four times a week during the school year. Their repertoire includes choral literature ranging from early church music to music of the twentieth century.

The purpose of this choir is to exhibit standards of musical excellence in performance and to maintain a living choral tradition in North Carolina worthy of the community and of the state.

This musical presentation is made possible through the Music Ministry and the Music Committee of the Raeford Presbyterian Church. It is free and open to the public.
