Hoke student wins driver's ed roadeo

A Hoke High Driver's Ed student garnered the most points and captured a first place win in a Roadeo held Saturday.

Rebecca Walters won the competition, and another Hoke student, Jeff Melton, placed 12th out of 22 competitors.

By winning, Rebecca has qualified for the state Roadeo held on April 26 in Charlotte.

The Roadeo was sponsored by the Southeastern North Carolina Driver Traffic Safety Education Association.

The contest consisted of eight different skills on a Range.

Each student collected 20 points for each maneuver; if they finished the course without penalty points, they could have scored 16 points. Rebecca scored 144 points.

Two students from Fayetteville placed second and third.

Rebecca will also represent Hoke High school in the 1984 version of Dodge - Amvets Drive excellence program to be held April 5.

Gillespie to attend NC State visitation

Lisa A. Gillespie of Hoke County is among more than 400 black high school students who have been accepted to attend North Carolina State University in the fall and are expected to attend the university's annual "Minority Visitation Day" Saturday. Many will be accompanied by their parents.

The event is sponsored annually by the NCSU Admissions Office as part of its ongoing efforts to attract and encourage minority students to enroll at N.C. State.

According to the event's coordinator, Ms. Rhonda Whitten Huffman, assistant director of admissions, most of the day's events will take place on the University Student Center Plaza, weather permitting. The schedule includes a welcome talk at 10 a.m. by NCSU Provost and Vice Chancellor Nash N. Winstead and presentations from the faculty, student services, financial aid and a talk by Ms. Kimi Jones, a black sophomore at the university.

Plans include a barbecue lunch complete with entertainment by the NCSU New Horizons Choir. The students will have an opportunity to visit their prospective departments, tour the campus and meet with successful black student mentors.
