Pottery has heritage in state's history

When the first English settlers arrived in the New World 400 years ago, they found the native Americans cooking in "earthen pots," a fact that is really not surprising since pottery, like fire and hunting implements, is a basic tool of civilization.

In fact, native pottery has been found in every culture of the world but two -- in New Zealand and Australia.

More than likely, the first examples of North Carolina pottery were made by the Indians pounding clay made from pulverized quartz, sand and crushed shell; shaping the pots from coils or strips of clay until the vessel reached the desired shape and then smoothing them by hand. Certainly, this method of pottery was typical of native American pottery at the time.

Pottery was and remains a widely practiced folk art in North Carolina, one that has evolved from one of the most basic utilitarian crafts.

The earliest European settlers in the state relied on the pottery they brought with them or what they could fashion themselves. Since early transportation methods were unreliable for safe transport of fragile earthenware, many successful settlements also had skilled potters, and North Carolina with its rich and varied soil was no exception.

Among the active potteries in North Carolina today are Old Salem, Inc., Seagrove Pottery, J.B. Cole's Pottery, M.L. Owens Pottery, Jugtown Pottery, Joe T. Owen Pottery, Teague's Pottery, Cole's Pottery, Brown's Pottery and Evan's Pottery.

They are found in Forsyth, Randolph, Montgomery, Moore, Lee and Buncombe counties.

North Carolina maintains an active pottery community today. Many have inherited their family traditions. Some still operate kilns dug into the earth in the tradition of the earliest potters.

A swelled head?
No, and this large fruit is not a pumpkin either, not in August. It is a cantaloupe. Mary Jones brought this 26 pound monster into The News-Journal office in a dump truck. Seriously, it was grown in her garden fertilized with quail droppings and brought in herself, with some difficulty. Her cantaloupe was given a hat and told to smile.

Soybean increases hurt prices in North Carolina

By Willie Featherstone, Jr.
County Extension Chairman

Current indications are that sufficient rationing of old crop soybeans has occurred, and cash prices in Central North Carolina markets will likely range between $6.50-$7 per bushel for the next few weeks.

Soybean prices declined sharply in early July as a result of improved crop conditions and a larger than expected USDA June stocks report.

Hoke County growers have increased soybean acres slightly this year because of their inability to plant corn due to a cold, wet spring.

All farmers are asked to certify with the ASCS office planted acres by August 10. After that date we will know the number of acres planted to each crop in Hoke County.

These reports are important to Hoke County producers from the standpoint of forward pricing the 1984 soybean crop. Many times these reports will cause the market to move either up or down. If you can accurately anticipate which way the price will move, then a producer will be able to make a better marketing decision.

Based on this year's planting, prices will remain very sensitive to any threat of crop trouble, and additional weather scare rallies are likely. Producers should follow markets closely during the next four weeks.

NEMATODES

Many soybean producers will experience nematode problems this year, and will have reduced yields as a result of nematode infested

Extension News

There is no recommended chemical treatment for nematode in fields already planted to soybeans, however, this summer is an excellent time for Hoke County growers to identify nematode problems and determine whether soybeans should be planted in these fields next year with preplant chemical treatments, or should the field be rotated to another crop for 1985.

If you need help with diagnosing a problem or deciding what treatment is needed, contact your County Agricultural Extension Office.

Can recycling hits record

Reynolds Aluminum Recycling Company recycled the equivalent of more than 72 million aluminum cans in North Carolina during the first six months of 1984.

A Reynolds official predicted another record year for aluminum recycling in North Carolina.

"We had felt all along that this could be the best year yet for aluminum recycling in North Carolina," John Koschwanez, area manager for Reynolds Aluminum Recycling Company, said. "Based on our figures through the end of June, it looks very good for a record this year."

"So far this year, we have recycled more than three million pounds of aluminum in North Carolina," Koschwanez noted, "and we have paid North Carolina consumers more than $1 million for that aluminum."

"Many of our locations are now open longer hours, and more days each week, to make recycling aluminum as convenient as possible," he said. "Local recyclers can find out the location, hours of operation and prices paid for their nearest recycling operation by calling our toll-free number anytime, 1-800-228-2525."

Reynolds purchases clean all-aluminum beverage cans and other clean household aluminum products such as pie plates, foil, frozen food and dinner trays, and dip, pudding and meat containers. Reynolds also purchases miscellaneous aluminum items such as siding, gutters, storm door and window frames, and lawn furniture tubing.

These items should be free of any non-aluminum items, cut to lengths not exceeding three feet, bundled and not mixed with cans.

Aluminum castings including pots and pans, power lawn mower housings and barbecue grill also are purchased and recycled by Reynolds.

In the Fayetteville area, Reynolds Recycling is located in Fayetteville at Westwood Shopping Center (behind Center), Highway 401 Bypass; Monday through Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. and Sunday 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

In Raeford at Edenborough Shopping Center, Harris Avenue; Tuesday, Friday and Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 11:00 a.m.
