Crop residue management aid to controlling erosion

By Donnie Harris District Conservationist The 1984 crop season is nearing an end here in Hoke County. This year has proven to have been a better growing season than the previous three years for most crops produced in the county.

Many farmers are satisfied with their crop's production as well as the prices at the market. We did not have the hot dry weather that caused many crops in the past to suffer a decrease in production.

There has been adequate rain and sunshine to provide crops with proper moisture and growing conditions for an increase in crop yields with proper nutrients. Crop production here in the county ap-pears to have been good for 1984.

Although we still have a number of crops in the fields to be harvested, such as corn, cotton and soybeans, now is the time to begin thinking about managing your crop residue for erosion control and possible reduction in farm operational expenses.

The harvesting of these crops may produce enough residue to provide an adequate cover of material on the soil surface to prevent soil particles from being blown or washed off your fields.

Take a few minutes and think about the advantages in managing your crop residue:

•Reduces wind and water erosion

·Possible reduction in operational expenses

 Increases organic matter in the soil

Increases soil moisture

 Improves soil farmability Instead of discing crop residue into the soil after harvesting your crops, save that fuel as well as the wear and tear on your equipment for the next years growing season. Farmers that disc crop residue into the soil surface after harvesting their crops are leaving their fields unprotecteed against soil erosion during the winter months of the year.

Many of you probably have noticed dust clouds blowing across fields with no residue or cover crop to protect the soil during the months of March and early April.

In these clouds are valuable topsoil, fertilizer and organic matter being removed off the land. This means a possible decrease in potential crop production.

Take time to consider crop residue management on your farm. Protect your fields from wind and water erosion.

For more information on managing your crop residue, con-tact the Hoke County Soil and Water Conservation District office.

Fall is good time to begin soil tests

By Willie Featherstone, Jr. County Extension Chairman With the harvest season rapidly approaching, it is time to startmaking some basic management decisions for next year.

First, and perhaps the most important item, on the agenda is the early collection of soil samples for nematode assay and soil testing.

By utilizing these services, growers can avoid needless applications of fertilizers, lime, and nematicides. Early sampling for both soil testing and nematode assays has several advantages.

First of all, the turn-around time to get the results of the test is reduced.

With the increased demand on both the soil testing and nematode laboratories, the springtime procrastinator will end up waiting 6-8 weeks for results. Early sampling also gives growers more time to formulate their management plans with regard to lime, fertilizer and nematode treatments that may be required.

By applying lime in the fall, the farmer can avoid the delays caused by winter rains and give the lime time to react to get the maximum benefit.

According to Dr. Ray Tucker, agronomist, and Dr. Jack Imbriani, nematologist, of the NCDA Agronomic Division, samples taken now will yield reliable assays and soil tests.

Labeling laws improve washing instructions

By Alice L. Pettitt Home Extension Agent If you're like most people, you check what kind of care a garment is going to require before you buy

In fact, a recent national survey of women showed that 55% of those interviewed always check care labels when purchasing clothing; another 28 interviewed said they usually check the care labels.

There's good news for these savvy consumers; early in 1984 the Federal Trade Commission's new rules on what those labels must say went into effect. The change w to consumers is as precise and complete as possible

Care labels must state what regular care is needed for the ordinary use of the product. For instance, in the past the phrase "machine wash" meant different things to different manufacturers. The FTC's new rules eliminate any ambiguity; if a lable only says "machine wash" then it means that the highest possible temperature is safe to use. However, if damage is poss
