Black history celebration

Upchurch students performed for a full house this week in celebration of Black History Month. State

Rep. Sidney Locks was the guest speaker.

Upchurch honors black history

North Carolina House Representative Sidney A. Locks, Jr. was the keynote speaker for the Black History Celebration held at Upchurch auditorium.

Introduced by Miss Lorie Smith, Locks challenged students to set high goals for themselves and then devote their time and talents to the business of achievement.

By emphasizing the accomplishments of such distinguished Afro-Americans as Dr. Daniel Hale Williams, George Washington Carver, and Charles Drew, Locks pointed out that obstacles must and can be overcome through hard work and determination.

Preceding Lock's inspiring message were musical selections by the school's chorus and a solo performance of "Sometimes I Feel Like A Motherless Child" by Miss Ann Weathersbee.

All musical selections were under the direction of the school Choral Director, Miss Ellen Heidenreich.

Seventh grader Monica Ray further seasoned the program by briefly citing the reasons why Black History is celebrated.

This year's theme, "Believers and Achievers: A Salute to black Americans" was spearheaded by the school's social studies department under the direction of department chairperson William Munn.

"We are very pleased and proud of the success of the black history observance at our school. We had the cooperation of the entire school body - and we feel that type of cooperation is the essence of brotherhood," Munn said.

One of the many persons who contributed to the success of Upchurch's black history observance was Art teacher Mrs. Eloise Carter who worked diligently with students to prepare a striking display of famous black American sketches for the enjoyment of the school family and visiting friends.

"Warm, inspiring, and rewarding" is how Mrs. Geraldine Munn, a seventh grade Social Studies teacher described the event. "I can hardly wait to do it again next year."

Upchurch Junior High School principal Mr. C.A. Edwards in the closing remarks encouraged all students to work together, study hard, and strive to achieve.

Student ushers for the observance were: Cynthia Jones, Thomas Bissett, Jason Jones, Diane Locklear, Michael Warren and Kendra Parker.
