Miss Fayetteville
Kimberly Ann Evans won the Miss Fayetteville Beauty Pageant last Saturday night. Kim, 24, works at the Hoke County Children's Center in Raeford. Judges probably had little choice as to who to award the title since Evans won the swimsuit competition, the evening gown competition, the interview and the talent competition. This was Kim's third year in the pageant, and she has done better each year. Her first year, she was second runner-up. Last year, she was first runner up and look at her now. Kim models her crown here during Sunday's open house at the Children's Center.

H. Gillis installed to head state group

Harold L. Gillis, Director of Vocational Education for the Hoke County Schools was installed as President of the North Carolina Association of School Administrators at the Spring meeting held in Raleigh, April 24-26.

Youth Center volunteers honored

Staff and residents of Sandhills Youth Center at McCain, North Carolina, joined the ranks of countless other federal, state, local and private agencies across our nation in honoring its citizen volunteers during National Volunteer Week.

Sandhills' more than 50 Citizen Volunteers recently were honored with an appreciation banquet featuring a delicious meal prepared by residents. Also beautiful certificates of appreciation were presented - these too were produced by residents.

Prison staff recognize that incarcerated residents oftentimes present far greater needs than can be addressed within the fixed time frames allotted; thus they employ a continuous recruitment of concerned citizen volunteers who serve as correctional partners.

Since 1974 the growing corps of dedicated citizen volunteers have responded faithfully by becoming dependable partners in corrections and have come to gain satisfaction and a feel of intrinsic accomplishment through knowledge that the quality of life for many resident offenders has been improved through their caring association.

Department of Correction Assistant Secretary for Programs and Personnel Development, Lattie Baker Jr., keynoted the appreciation banquet, issuing a stirring message to the volunteers on how their valuable correctional partnerships carry over to touch many beneficial, humanitarian and creative aspects of resident lives. Baker further cited the prison overcrowding issue as need for citizen partnerships to be expanded beyond the physical prison confines to assist with stabilizing prisoners' transition into the respective communities.

Center program personnel and resident representatives who work closely with programs involving citizen volunteers were on hand and assisted with honoring the volunteers.

Sandhills Superintendent F.D. Hubbard thanked all the volunteers, staff and residents for working so well together in touching one another's lives and giving of themselves to produce fruit.
