

Local teacher attends state training meeting

Jacqueline Gladney, an officer of the Hoke county unit of the North Carolina Association of Educators (NCAE), attended a day-long training conference May 11 on techniques of telling the public school story to parents and citizens.

Gladney, who will serve as President of the unit next year, participated in a workshop for newly elected leaders of the 42,000 member professional association, NCAE.

The session was held in the NCAE Center in Raleigh.

Approximately 200 NCAE leaders from throughout North Carolina attended the conference for training in how to keep the public informed about programs, activities, and events happening in public schools.

The conference also began

NCAE's new program to develop a model school that would demonstrate practices, policies, and techniques which teachers believe are best for children.

The NCAE has proposed spending up to $100,000 on a project to show that teacher ideas will produce the highest quality education program.

The NCAE leaders began the process of combining the very best teacher ideas for quality instruction to create the best possible teaching/learning atmosphere.

The ideas will be studied and refined during the 1985-86 Association year.

The leaders were shown materials which they will use during the next year as NCAE embarks on a program of taking the message, about schools to the North Carolina public.

Raeford man is arrested after break-in to chat

A Raeford man was out of jail Monday after being accused of entering a woman's house by force and pointing a shotgun in her face when she tried to leave the premises.

Kenneth Jones, 24, is out of jail on $1,500 bond after being charged with assault and injury to personal property.

According to reports by sheriff's deputies, Jones kicked in the door of a trailer belonging to Phillis T. White and said he wanted to talk.

The woman asked Jones to leave, and he walked outside, according to reports.

White then decided to go to the Hoke County Sheriff's Department to report the incident, but no sooner did she get in her car than Jones was at her window with a shotgun pointed at her head, reports say.

According to reports, the woman ducked so Jones ran to the other side of the car and pointed the gun at her again.

The man then left, reports say. In the process of avoid the gun being pointed at her, White's car apparently hit one of her neighbor's cars pushing it into a porch, according to reports.

In another area incident, Cape

Fear Valley Medical Center reported to the Sheriff's Department last Sunday admitting an 18-year-old youth from the Rockfish area who was suffering from apparent self-inflicted injuries.

According to a report from Hoke County Detective Jimmy Riley, the youth shot himself in the chest because he wanted to see what it felt like.

The boy used a .22 calibre rifle which was found in his room at the home of his parents.

The spent bullet shell was still in the gun, reports say.

A break-in last Thursday netted apparent thieves almost $3,000 worth of personal property taken from an area resident.

Betty Wilson reported that her daughter came home from school on that afternoon and found that the screen had been ripped off the kitchen window.

Taken from the home was an exact total of $2,999.84 in property including a .38 calibre pistol, an entire JVC stereo system, a color television, a wallet containing cash and some jewelry, reports say.

There was also about $25 in damage done to the house, reports say.
