ford to have many more foliage feeders than pod feeders before an insecticide should be applied. For help in identifying insects, contact your county agent.
Effective insecticidal treatment of soybeans requires (1) proper timing, (2) correct insecticide type and rate, and (3) satisfactory application. Timing is critical.
The scouting effort is designed to identify if and when treatment is necessary.
Once a treatable situation is encountered an insecticide must be applied within three days if caterpillars are small to medium size; high numbers of large caterpillars should be treated immediately. It would be wiser for soybean farmers to respond to insect problems very promptly.
This can only be done by early detection of the problem and by preventing insecticide application tie-ups.
