St. Andrews offering business ed

As St. Andrews Presbyterian College prepares to continue the business of education this fall, the College's Continuing Education Program also is preparing to meet the business education needs of people who want to advance their careers.

Continuing Education at St. Andrews offers two certificate programs which serve to further the personal and professional interests of area residents.

The Certificate in Business Management (CBM) Program is designed to enhance business skills and to improve managerial competence. The program seeks to meet the needs of middle managers who want to increase their knowledge of their own field, individuals who feel that their education is specialized and want to broaden their business background and skills and individuals who desire a career in business management.

The St. Andrews Communications for Adult Needs (SCAN) Program focuses on the development of practical abilities which can provide a clearer understanding of communication arts and increase the effectiveness of interpersonal skills. The program is tailored to the needs of individuals who seek to understand more fully the systems and processes by which people communicate and who want to improve their own communication skills.

The St. Andrews CBM program has been in existence for four years. During that period a dozen area business people have completed the program. Currently, there are a dozen more individuals who are enrolled in the program and are in various stages of completion.

The CBM program will offer two courses for the 1985 fall term. Principles of Accounting will be an introduction to the principles, rules and procedures of accounting with emphasis on preparing financial statements for users outside the firm. Topics will include the preparation of financial journals, ledgers, income statements and balance sheets.

Principles of Marketing will be a functional analysis of marketing and its importance as an economic activity. The course will stress the understanding of the significance of marketing as a vital process in all types of organizations; an understanding of the functions, principles, concepts and techniques of marketing and an understanding from both the marketing manager's and the consumer's perspectives.

The SCAN program, which was initiated last fall, also will offer two courses this fall. Cultural and Social Anthropology will introduce students to the major concepts, methods and findings of the study of the human experience. Emphasis will be given to anthropological approaches to research and analysis of the functions of human groups including economics, technology, politics, ideology, art and language and their interrelationships.

SCAN will introduce a special studies course in the fall specifically for continuing education students. Understanding and Communicating Ethical Issues in Medicine will explore ethical issues involved in modern medicine - abortion, organ transplants, killing and letting die and procreative technologies. The course is designed to inform the student of these ethical issues and to provide specific skills for communicating one's convictions.

Continuing Education at St. Andrews is offered at one-half the normal per credit cost to adult students who enroll in no more than two courses per term.
