

Not just an ordinary week for local residents

Festival window
This window at Calico Corner on Main Street proudly displays spirit of the Turkey Festival.

Sporting shirts
Scurlock school faculty, staff and students don Turkey T-shirts during Monday's T-Shirt Day. Students (sitting): Kim Gibson, Jennifer Posey, Tripp Plummer, Amy Smith, Dayna Edwards. (Kneeling): Verna Barnhell, JoAnn Butler, Sandy Barnes, Jeannie Smith, Ingrid Madden and Elsie

Helping hand
CP&L electricians lend a helping hand to the festival by installing wiring to connect the stoves for the North Carolina Turkey Cooking Contest finals. CP&L crews also worked to insure that the proper power was available for Main Street vendors and musicians.

Memorabilia
Raeford-Hoke Chamber of Commerce Manager Beverly Pasternak, recently returned from statewide television appearances, sits among some of the items the festival committee will have on sale during Saturday's Festival activities.

Residential note
Hoke County Tax Supervisor Dale Teal's home has a festive turkey strutting on his door to accent this fall scene.

Finishing touches
Raeford Municipal workmen put the finishing touches on a Main Street utilities repair which interrupted cleanup efforts for the festival. City workers have spent long hours cleaning streets, pulling weeds and picking up trash in an effort to make Raeford shine for festival visitors. Municipal crews also face the problem of cleaning up after the event.

Getting ready for crowd

who are expected to visit Raeford on Saturday.
