Burlington Ind. wins award for helping Hoke Co. schools

The Raeford Plants of Burlington Industries were recognized for contributions to North Carolina public schools on Oct. 3, 1985, at an awards program sponsored by the North Carolina Business Committee for Education.

Burlington Industries was one of 15 companies in the state commended by Governor James G. Martin and the Business Committee for Education. Sixteen outstanding teachers from around the state were also recognized.

Wayne Peterson, President of Carolina Telephone, announced the winners while Gov. Martin and Jere A. Drummond, committee chairman and vice president for Southern Bell, presented the awards at an event held at the Jefferson Standard Country Club in Greensboro.

Funds for the ceremonies were provided by the 63 North Carolina firms which comprise the Business Committee.

The Committee's main purpose is to improve the quality of education in North Carolina. One of its main strategies is to encourage business and industry leaders, at the local level, to get involved in a partnership with schools in their areas.

Burlington Industries has donated $18,730.80 for computer hardware and software to the Hoke County Schools.

In addition to cash contributions, Burlington Industries has been deeply involved in a long-range planning effort of the school system which has resulted in major improvements to the school system. Facilities, instructional programs, funding, and organizational patterns are all affected by this thrust.

Burlington personnel have been directly involved in efforts which have secured additional funding for the schools from county government.

Including Burlington Industries, 15 North Carolina businesses were recognized for their contribution.

They include Georgia-Pacific Corporation, Dudley and Asheboro; the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce; Cates Pickle Company, Faison; Westinghouse Electric Corporation-Control Division, Asheville; General Electric Corporation, Wilmington; United Carolina Bank, Whiteville; Vermont American Corporation; Lincoln; Thomasville Furniture Industries Inc., Thomasville; Duke Power Company, Charlotte; Roses Stores Inc., Henderson; Seacor Corporation, Hickory; First Bank, Troy; Wilkes Chamber Foundation Inc., North Wilkesboro; and Wachovia Bank & Trust Company, Winston-Salem.

Quitting smoking takes skill

By Charles Blackburn
Duke Univ. Medical Center

Giving up cigarettes depends on skill more than will power, according to a psychologist who directs one of the most successful quit smoking clinics in the country.

"The most effective strategies for quitting address both the addictive and psychological aspects of smoking," according to Dr. Robert H. Shipley at Duke University Medical Center.

In five evening sessions, Shipley and his colleagues at the Duke Quit Smoking Clinic teach people the skills needed to keep from lighting another cigarette. The sessions last an hour and a half each.

"Ninety-five percent of America's 53 million smokers want to quit but don't know how," according to Shipley. "Many try but find it hard to avoid the pitfalls along the way."

After a stressful day, for example, someone trying to quit may reason that, "Just one cigarette will help me relax, and after that, I won't smoke any more."

"There may be certain times in the day when smokers crave a cigarette, such as with their morning coffee," he said. "We teach people how to combat the urge to smoke as they reduce their dependency on nicotine."

Hoke Scouts are invited on campout

Boy Scout Troops from Raeford are among those invited here October 19-21 for a special camping weekend based on "Energy Awareness 1985."

Expected in this coastal city are some 600 Scouts and their leaders from the eight counties that make up the Cape Fear Council. They will spend the weekend learning about energy topics as guests of Carolina Power & Light Company.

The Scouts, who are from Bladen, Brunswick, Columbus, Hoke, New Hanover, Pender, Robeson, and Scotland counties will camp overnight Oct. 18 and 19 at a wooded site near Southport Elementary School.

On Saturday, October 19, they will be involved in activities at the campsite and travel by bus to the CP&L Brunswick Visitors Center and Nuclear Power Plant for special programs on how electricity is made, energy conservation, and nuclear power.

The boys, ages 12 to 18, will tour the Visitors Center, where there are some 30 exhibits and displays on energy-related topics.

They also will be used to the plant's control room simulator and biological laboratory.

The simulator is an exact copy of the control rooms at the plant's two electrical generating units. But instead of being hooked up to turbines and generators, it is connected to a large computer which simulates plant operating conditions.

The facility is used to train and retrain the people who operate the nuclear power plant.

The biology laboratory is the workplace of 16 staff members who job is to constantly monitor the impact of CP&L's Brunswick and Sutton plants on the local environment.
