GEORGE W. BROOKS WAS CONVICTED

Hundreds of People Were in Court to Hear the Evidence

OTHER CASES TRIED

Interest in recorder's court yesterday centered around the trial of G. W. Brooks and Maude Pleasants charged with fornication and adultery. Both were convicted and Brooks was fined $100 and cost. In addition he was required to give $100 bond for his appearance in court the first Tuesday of each month for twelve months and show that he was living the proper life. The Pleasants woman was sentenced to twelve months at the county home with the privilege of leaving the city if she cared to. A capias will be issued for her arrest today at noon and if served she will have to go to the workhouse for a year.

The Brooks-Pleasants case was not called until several others had been tried but the crowd that thronged the court room and crowded around the railing of the raised stand waited patiently until this particular case was called. Everyone leaned forward eagerly in order not to miss a single word uttered by the witnesses.

Patrolman Beavers was the first witness to take the chair and he told the court of what he had seen at the home of the Pleasant woman near the East Durham ball park. He told the court that it was no unusual thing to find the automobile of Brooks at the Pleasant home in the early morning hours and that upon entering the house on two occasions he found Brooks there with the woman. He told of seeing the man and woman riding around together both in the defendant's car and in his buggy.

Officer Markham came next and his evidence was practically a verification of Beavers' for they were working the "outside" together when this evidence was gathered.

The city attorney then called Charlie Brooks to the stand and he told the court that on one occasion his father sent his mother to Norfolk to visit and carried the Pleasant woman and another woman whom he did not know to his home for the night. He told the court that when he returned home that night and found them there that he refused to stay under the same roof and after reporting the matter to the officers went to a hotel and spent the night. Told that when he returned home the following morning that he found the strange woman cooking breakfast in his home and the Pleasant woman superintending affairs as though she were the mistress of the house.

The defense offered no evidence. Brooks sat through the trial with an immovable face speaking occasionally to his attorney, but seldom glancing in the direction of the woman who sat to his right. With the woman it was different. Apparently she enjoyed the proceedings. The most revolting testimony caused her to smile broadly. She appeared to find pleasure in the proceedings and it seemed as though the unwholesome publicity she was receiving brought her pleasure.

When the evidence was all in and judgment had been passed the attorney whispered to the woman and then asked that she be given a longer time to get out of the city as her clothes were in the laundry but the recorder flatly refused saying that she would have to go today or serve the time imposed.

At the close of the evidence and prior to the passing of judgment the city attorney spoke a few words in behalf of Brooks. He thought that if the woman were to leave town that Brooks would return home to his family and be the husband that he was before he became infatuated with the woman.

OTHER CASES
The O. K. Grocery company and

J. D. Edwards and -Son, Mangum street merchants, were in court for displaying merchandise on the sidewalk. In both cases judgment was suspended on the payment of the cost.

M. Shevel and Dr. J. M. Manning was tried for violating the traffic law.

Judgment was suspended on the payment of the cost. Dr. Manning produced a hearty laugh when he likened the officer who summoned him to court to a New York traffic cop as he came out into the street and stopped him by lifting his hand in the air and flagging him.
