tion and purchase a bulb, the boys stated they had no money, whereupon they were ordered to store their car for the night.

Evans, who was driving, steered the machine into the garage while the other two boys, evidently having business elsewhere, departed. Perhaps all would have gone well with Evans if, just as the flier entered the building, a lusty cackle hadn't come from the rear of the car.

An investigation disclosed three old hens, rather peevish from confinement in a sack, resting in the machine. Evans stated at first that they belonged to him but later admitted that he and the other two had lifted them from a roost over in Yarkin. As a result, Corporal Lentz left Evans roosting in the local lockup and departed in search of the others.

Searching proved of no avail, however, and a trip back to the jail brought the names of the two and where they lived from Evans. Next morning Corporal Lentz made them a visit and stored them, also, where all chickens would be safe.

"I know it is not a part of the state patrol's duty to arrest chicken thieves," Corporal Lentz told a Tribune reporter, "but you might say that we'll be glad to attend to such small matters if the opportunity of-
