

. Italian method TAXES I was greatly impressed on my re cent visit to Italy with the age of some of the houses which are still occupied for residential and business purposes. A house three hundred years old is almost "modern". In the Jewish section of Rome, where there are still descendants of the Jewish slaves captured in the Holy Land by the Emperor Titus, while Saint Paul was still preaching, some of the buildings have stood since the time of the Caesars! Many buildings from six hundred to a thousand years old are still occupied in Venice, Florence and Naples. They are all built of stone or brick, of course.

They have survived because Italy like other European nations, has never taxed real estate out of existence. There is no tax on land or buildings as such. Farm land pays taxes only on what it produces town buildings pay taxes only on the rent income. If there is no production or no income, no taxes. That struck me as a sensible system.

EER sad figures Whatever happens in the matter REER of legalizing beer without repealing thing seems certain to me. The tax of persons ever employed on beer will never, unless the open breweries was about 80,0 saloon returns provide anything like which its advocates have claimed. than about 60 million barrels of

The proposed tax of $5 a barrel would be nearly a nickel a pint, so it is hardly likely that anywhere nearly as much beer would be sold, especially if it had Prohibition amendment, one to be bought in bottles and carried home to drink. GYROSCOPES . . how they work Three little flywheels down in the hold of a great ship keep it from rolling in the worst of storms. The gyroscopic stabilizers on the 50,000ton Conte di Savoia look huge when one stands beside them, but com-pared with the bulk of the ship itself they are about as big, proportionately, as three grapefruit in

A flywheel always tends to re-volve in the plane in which in Try to tilt it and it will started. resist. These gyroscopes are simply flywheels revolving at 91,0 revolutions a minute. The first wave that strikes the side of a ship does not roll it; rolling is due to a succession of wave impulses. Check the first impulse and the next wave becomes, in effect, the first wave, and so on. A very slight resistance checks the first wave. That is all there is to the stabilizing of a ship by gyroscopes.

CHURCH it stands One does not have to be a Roman Catholic to stand reverent and awe struck in the great church at Rome which was built over the grave of Saint Peter, the founder of the organized church which is based upon the teachings of Christ. It is the very heart and center of Christianity, as well as the largest and most beautiful church in the world.

I was interested in the fact that the last two pretenders to the throne of England, James Stuart and his son Charles Edward, are also buried in St. Peter's; they are still held by many good Catholics to have been wrongfully barred from the throne of Britain.

On the road to Ostia stands the tomb of Saint Paul, who was, like Peter, condemned to death in Rome for his Christian teachings.

The great structures of Pagan Rome stand in ruins; no one knows where Caesars are buried. The glory of their ancient capital is the churches and monuments of the religion they persecuted.
