SING!

In the year seven hundred and fifty, B. C., the Spartans got into a row with the then powerful Greeks. The Greeks waged war on the Spartans and defeated them so thoroughly that they afterwards held them in contempt. Having watched the poor struggle the Spartans put up against the Greeks, another neighboring nation attacked them. Their morale completely gone, the Spartans sent to the Greeks begging the loan of a great general to lead them in combat against the new enemy.

The Greeks in derision sent them Tyrtæus, a crippled schoolmaster. Tyrtæus, however, was a serious minded fellow who did not see the joke his nation was playing on the Spartans, and took his leadership very much in earnest.

He went to Sparta and wrote many songs of the past glories of the Spartans. These songs he taught the soldiers, and they marched into battle behind the crippled schoolmaster singing of the glory of Sparta. They defeated the enemy and restored themselves to the respect of the world.

This bit of ancient history repeated itself during the great war of a few years ago. No man who watched that war with an observant eye can fail to realize that Tipperary, The Long, Long Trail, We Won't Come Back Till It's Over Over There, and a hundred similar songs had a great influence on the morale of the English speaking forces of the Allies.

At times there is a disposition to deride the singing at Kiwanian luncheons. A man who visits many Kiwanian clubs is almost sure to realize that it is no mere coincidence that the best clubs on the continent are the best singing clubs. Whether they sing well because they are good clubs, or whether they are good clubs because they sing well, is always open to argument.

But there is something about men's opening up their mouths and allowing the joy that is in them to become vocal, which adds to their spirit and their enthusiasm for Kiwanian. Singing is far from being just a Kiwanian custom. It serves a real physiological purpose in Kiwanian work, and everything possible should be done to discourage the tendency to belittle it, to deride those who sing and to frustrate the efforts of the song leader by supposedly witty remarks.

If the club president will watch for one or two meetings and note who are the leaders in this thoughtless defeatism, he can stop it. These men should have their attention called to the effect of their thoughtlessness, and their co-operation in the singing requested as a favor.

All Kiwanians are good Kiwanians. Some, however, are thoughtless Kiwanians, but they need only to have their attention called to the results of their good natured carelessness and it will end at once.

No sensible person expects glee club harmony and precision from an entire Kiwanian club. The best which can be hoped for is volume.

That attained, the whole object of Kiwanian is attained and, like the Spartans singing as they went to battle behind Tyrtæus, Kiwanian will go into the joyous battle it is waging against the civic ills of our towns and win as surely as did the Spartans.

MARKING TIME

In military drill there is an order which is the caption for this particular editorial. When men are obeying that order, they do a lot of walking, but as their feet are merely replaced, they get nowhere.

A new lot of Kiwanian club presidents and Program Committee chairmen are now functioning for the year 1933. A certain number of the clubs under this new leadership will march forward and be able to show ground gained at the end of the year. A certain other group of these same officers will mark time and leave the club where it stood when they came into office, except for a few soldiers who dropped out of the ranks because they tired of standing in one place and making motions which got them nowhere.

By the time this editorial is published, it will be possible for any observer to estimate pretty accurately what the leaders of his club will do during the year. Already they will have demonstrated their leadership or their tendency to stand in one spot.

Budgeting of the finances of a club has become such a standard practice that it is no longer a problem. All the better clubs are doing it, and this places them on practically a level of equality so far as proper functioning is concerned.

The wide variations of success in different clubs is almost entirely a matter of how the club's time is budgeted. That club which outlines a definite program for three, six or twelve months, and obtains speakers to carry out the program, will succeed. The club which secures speakers from week to week, regardless of what they are to talk about, will fail to make a big success.

The club president or Program Committee chairman who budgets the time of each meeting long before it is held, and conducts it with watch in hand, giving only the budgeted time for each feature of the program, will close on time and run off his meeting with the precision of a well oiled watch and make that meeting a success, while the meeting conducted without a time budget will drag, be uninteresting and cut down attendance.

These are simple things, yet in them is the essence of success and the cause of failure. The club will mark time or advance, depending on how well its time is budgeted.
