FAR FROM SETTLED

Although much has been said and written about a proposed settlement of the Smith Reynolds case through the establishment of a huge Reynolds endowment in which other members of the Reynolds family might join, the case is far from being settled, it was announced Sunday.

TODAY and TOMORROW

WASHINGTON . . . one industry

I was in Washington for a few days recently, and what impressed me most was the utter ignorance of the people of Washington about what is going on the rest of the world.

Building industry is booming, constructing new Government buildings. Government employees are working every day, yelping mildly about a small reduction in salaries. Streets are crowded with cars, driven with the utmost recklessness and most inefficient traffic regulations. Stores are doing as good business as ever, at prices much higher than in New York. Rents are almost up to the highest level.

Washington has but one industry, the Government of the United States. It is so detached from the rest of the country that it might as well be in some other nation. It is difficult for the men who run the government to realize how bad conditions are elsewhere, when they see evidence all around them of great prosperity.

I have long believed that it was a serious mistake to locate the seat of government away from the center of business and industrial activity. If I could do it, I would move the Capitol and the White House to Chicago which is where they ought to be if they are really to represent the American people effectively.

LAND . . . safest investment

In spite of the fact that many owners of real estate have suffered great losses in the past few years, land remains the safest, soundest investment in the long run. The supply is limited, for one thing. Increasing population means increasing demand for land. Every baby born on Manhattan Island increases the value of the Woolworth building.

The time to buy land is now. Dollars are high now; they will be much cheaper shortly. Land is cheap now; it will be much higher before long. The time to buy anything is when everybody else wants to sell. If you own land, hold on to it; if you have dollars, buy land with them for safety!

Don't speculate in land! Pay for it and hold it. Don't speculate in anything on which you can't always realize something at a moment's notice. You can't move land around; you must wait until someone wants that piece at that spot. So buy land intelligently, in the path of the movement of population. Regard it as an investment for your children rather than as a way to make yourself rich over night.

The world's greatest and most enduring fortunes have been made by buying land and holding on to it.

EDUCATION . . . learn to work

My friend Walter Lippman, who also writes a column and, curiously enough, picked the same title for it as this column of mine, wrote something recently which seems to me the best statement of its kind I have ever seen:

"The truly educative process," said Lippman, "consists in learning to deal with reality, that is to say with people and objects and events that are not the mere projection of one's own wishes. Education is a matter of putting away childish things, of discovering that events do not respond to words, of learning that the world is not in us but that we are in the world."

Most of us live in a world of "wishful thinking." We'd like to be rich, and we dream of what we would do if we were rich, but we aren't willing to take all the trouble and worry on ourselves that anyone must take if he is to attain riches. Education, as Mr. Lippman points out, ought to teach youth that it must work for what it gets.

Too many young people grow up these days with the idea that the world owes them a living. The world owes nobody anything for which he does not give a commensurate return in labor of one sort or another.

COMPETITION . . . new order

For a great many years the United States has been committed to the principle that free competition in business and industry is, in the long run, the best way to get ahead. We set up anti-trust laws to prevent combinations and insure competition.

Everyone who has given the matter even a little thought realizes that the anti-trust laws have not worked as they were expected to. Competition has proved ruinous in many industries; in the soft coal industry, for example, where the owner of a coal mine had to work it himself if he was to get anything out of it at all, instead of combining with other mine-owners to produce only as much as the market would absorb and all share the profit.

All the signs point to the discarding of all regulations prohibiting trade combinations and the establishment under Government supervision of groups and associations of manufacturers and producers to fix prices and determine all other trade conditions.

That is, of course, going to make it harder for the ordinary man to get himself established in a competitive business or industry. It will result in the best men becoming employees instead of independent business men and the less than best dropping out of sight in the mass of humanity. That may be better for the social order, if we conceive that to be a system under which all humanity will eventually occupy the same plane of activity and income, but I greatly fear that when we take any steps to stifle the initiative of the individual and to limit his opportunities we will be abandoning the fundamental principle that has made America what it is.
