Following a brief honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Martin will be at home temporarily with the bridegroom's parents, at their home in North Elkin.

CHANGE

Forty years ago there were five hundred and eighty-six makers of silk hats in New York City alone. Today there are but twenty-three in the entire United States. Hair pins, canes, overshoes and various other commodities have almost passed into the limbo of forgotten products, while radios, home moving picture machines, golf and ping pong balls and other more modern articles have come rapidly to the front.

These changes in manufacture and sale are no more radical than the changes in city government, in taxation, in public parks and swimming pools. Where the changes in trade conditions affect only those directly engaged in manufacture and sale, the innumerable changes in city government are matters which interest every tax payer, and in which every citizen should be thoroughly educated.

Where does the city get its money? How much goes for policing, for sanitation, for parks, for schools, for fire protection, for paving and for the various departments of the city government? All this should be of infinite interest to every citizen.

Kiwanis boasts of developing by precept and example a more intelligent, aggressive and serviceable citizenship. Certainly education along the lines of city government is the first step in that direction. It is not possible for a man to take an interest in anything he does not understand, unless it be a magician pulling rabbits out of a hat.

There could be no more interesting talks than those which would be made gladly by the heads of the city's police department, fire department and those dozen other city departments of which the average citizen is almost unconscious, because they work so smoothly.

If a Kiwanis club is to be a real success in a city, it should know that city, its taxation and its disbursements, their relation one to the other, and the proportion and spread of the income and outgo.

Only a burglar can make a citizen police conscious, a fire make him realize the benefit of the fire department, and only a dead cat in front of his house make him aware of the existence of a sanitary department in his town. If the program chairman would arrange with the city government a Know Your Home Town course of meetings, the Kiwanians would have a more intelligent sympathy for the city fathers who are trying to make the home town a good town, and a more enthusiastic enemy toward an unsound government.

Turn over the paving rocks of your town government and see what is under them.

KIWANIS DIGNITY

Old-timers in Kiwanis recall with some embarrassment a feature of district and International conventions of a dozen years ago. Some misguided delegations, confusing the purpose of these conventions and their effect on the people of the convention city, came to the meetings in costumes ranging from handsome to ridiculous.

The recent convention at Los Angeles was marked with an entire absence of these misguided delegations. Club pride will always suggest a marker of some sort, like the well known arm bands of orange so characteristic of the Californians. These add a touch of color and in no way detract from the dignity of the wearer.

There is plenty of opportunity for costuming in some of the jovial social organizations, like the Shrine and the Elks, and it is appropriate there, but Kiwanis is an organization of the best business and professional men of the continent banded together with a serious purpose, and certainly absurd costumes have no place in their meetings.

The effect of the costume on the wearer is as detrimental as is the effect on the public. Put a man in a ridiculous costume and, having made a fool of himself in dress, he feels that it is incumbent on him to make a fool of himself in his actions. No better example can be given than the average masquerade ball or costume dance. Romeos feel it necessary to be romantic, clowns to turn somersaults and devils to be devilish.

Let us hope that these things have passed out of Kiwanis never to return, and that the joyousness of a convention will not be lessened by the fact that Kiwanians dress and act away from home exactly as they would at home. No convention city can ask more.
