

The 48th edition of the Social Register, exhibit "A" of those listed, and conveniently hidden in bottom dresser drawers of social climbers, has just been issued. It shows that many of the socially elect are staying in their country homes for the winter rather than making the customary migration to town. The reason isn't stated—preference or financial necessity?

The Berengaria arrived recently with the first Europeans to come here for the specific purpose of taking advantage of the fall of the dollar in relation to their own currency. One passenger declared that many Europeans plan to come to the United States in preference to their usual journeys to European holiday centers.

Herbert, a German just six years on our shores, stood behind the service bar shining up a new shipment of wine and liqueur glasses. With a broad smile he remarked, "Haven't got used to these yet. And cocktails? Ach—if somebody steals my book from this shelf, I'm sunk!" . . . And so it is with every restaurant in town that hasn't retained the bar men of old or drawn on the former employees of the most high-priced speakeasies. New York is going in for wholesale education in the etiquette of proper and gentlemanly drinking.

Saturday afternoon seems to be the busiest part of the week for the street vendors who call themselves "pitch men" and for shoe shine men. Back of the Metropolitan Opera building on Seventh avenue we counted 16 shine men in a single block and across the street in the same block there were 12 pitch men and two sandwich men.

A string of restaurants specializing in Italian foods go under the name of Caruso. The waiters are Italian for the most part, but the manager's name is Bloom! . . . And the cashiers? . . .

Roland Young collects penguins—in onyx, carnelian, ivory, china, jade, alabaster, and a stuffed one. Says these semi-comic birds give him the right slant on the human race and a saving sense of humor.

Sally, the three year old daughter of a South American was imprisoned after five months of petty thefts at Pier 7 on the Hudson River. Among other charges against her were the theft of many hammers and screwdrivers, the breakage of almost a dozen 200 watt lamps, the theft of a night watchman's lunch basket, snatching his alarm clock and throwing it at him. Three men who have been trying to capture her for a month have had great difficulties, for Sally was extremely agile, they say—even for monkey.
