

THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON

Washington, October 19.—The President's Chicago speech and the events which have followed it in Washington have given the Washington picture a new perspective. Instead of Justice Black and the Supreme Court, the war situation, particularly in the Far East, is now the focus of political attention. Mr. Black sits on the Supreme Court bench, although a movement is on foot to bring impeachment proceedings against him in the House of Representatives. The Supreme Court issue is dormant, if not dead, for the general belief here is that Mr.

Roosevelt will make no further effort to get Congress to authorize him to appoint additional judges.

Wars Again In Limelight

The war issue, however, is very much alive. It has turned the eyes of the whole world to the United States and its President, and it has brought the question of American neutrality in wars between other nations sharply to the forefront of domestic politics. Mr. Roosevelt practically threw overboard the Neutrality Act, and abandoned the policy of national isolation on which it is based, when he said in Chicago that the peace-loving nations of the world must make a concerted effort in opposition to nations breaking treaties and ignoring humane instincts. His words were clearly aimed at Japan, and while he reiterated that America is determined to keep out of war, yet "we cannot insure ourselves against the disasters of war and the danger of involvement." He suggested an international "quarantine" against nations guilty of violating their treaty obligations as a possible means of bringing them to their senses.

America "Takes Sides"

The intimation that the United States might be willing to cooperate with foreign powers in such a "quarantine" program was received with enthusiasm by England, France and Russia, but fell unpleasantly on the ears of the rulers of Germany, Italy and Japan. The State Department's statement, issued after a consultation with the President and the Cabinet, pleased the League of Nations and further displeased Japan. The Secretary of State called attention to the fact that Japan had violated not only the Nine-Power Treaty intended to protect China, but also the Kellogg-Briand pact of 1928 outlawing war as an instrument of national policy. The Nine-Power Treaty was signed in 1923 by the United States, Japan, Great Britain, China, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium and Portugal and guarantees the independence of China and her territorial integrity, binds the nine powers to aid her in maintaining a stable government, promises equal commercial opportunities in China for all nations, and binds the signatory powers not to seek special privileges in China at the expense of other nations. Washington understands that Japan had expected America to take no official notice of what it was doing in China, and has been greatly surprised by the State Department's attitude.

Congress Fears Entanglements

Surprise and some indignation has been manifested by members of both houses of Congress, at what seems to them like the flouting of the Neutrality Act by the Administration. That law provides that if the President declares that a state of war exists between any two nations, he shall prohibit the sale to either of them of arms and munitions, and shall forbid the sale to them of other goods unless they buy them for cash and take them away from our ports in their own ships.

The President did not formally declare that a state of war exists between Japan and China, but his suggestion of a "quarantine" in which all nations ought to join, and the intimation that the United States will take counsel with other powers to that end, have aroused the fears of the supporters of the Neutrality Act that its purpose, that of keeping the United States neutral in quarrels between other nations, is being disregarded, but that we are actually "taking sides" by denouncing Japan, and may, conceivably, be drawn into actual hostilities because of that partisanship.

Congressional Calendar Crowded

No one can clearly foresee all of the possible developments of the international situation, but it promises to hold the floor in Congress when it meets in special session, at the President's call, for the consideration of the Administration's "unfinished business." At that session, the President told the Washington newspaper men, he will ask for a bill for control of crops, a bill for control of maximum hours and minimum wages, a bill or bills for reorganization of the Federal executive structure and the Norris bill for the creation of seven regional planning authorities to recommend plans for a coordinated development of water power and other natural resources throughout the United States.

Farm Benefits By 1938

He promised the people of the Northwest, while he was out there, that farm legislation would be rushed through in order to make its benefits available to farmers in time for the 1938 crop season. The farm plan favored by the Administration is along the lines of the Flannagan bill introduced last spring. That is based on Secretary Wallace's "ever-normal granary" plan, with its provision for accumulating safe surpluses from abundant crop years as an offset against lean years resulting from drought, pestilences and floods. Present benefit payments would be continued to farmers carrying out approved soil conservation methods and would be financed by processing or excise taxes as under the AAA. Fight Due On Wages and Hours

The Black-Connerly bill to regulate hours and wages of workers is likely to have harder sledding than the farm bill. Southern Senators and Congressmen, almost to a man, are opposed to it. Moreover, business has become well solidified in opposition to the plan.

A tramp knocked at the door and asked a bite to eat. The lady of the house said: "You don't look like a man who should starve for lack of work. Why don't you get a job?" "I would lady," was the reply. "but everybody wants a letter of reference from the last man I worked for." "Well, why not get it?" "Because, madam," as he backed away, "he has been dead for twenty years."

November Pose

Speaker of the House, Alabama's William B. Bankhead, will be pounding for order soon at the special session of Congress now on the Presidential Calendar for sometime in November. Convinced during his recent 8,000-mile Western tour that the people desire him to "carry on," President Roosevelt is reported anxious to obtain quick Congressional support for the Wages and Hours bill, crop control and other New Deal measures.

Miss Nelle Morrison and Fred Sale Are Married Saturday

The home of Mrs. James Collins Morrison in Statesville was the scene of a simple and beautiful marriage Saturday afternoon at four o'clock when her daughter, Miss Nelle Morrison, became the bride of Fred Albert Sale of Statesville and Elkin.

Dr. J. H. Pressley of the First Associate Reformed Presbyterian church, pastor of the bride, officiated. Only the immediate families witnessed the ceremony. A program of nuptial music was rendered by Mrs. R. H. Frymoyer, pianist, and George H. Emory, soloist.

The bride and bridegroom were unattended. The bride, a petite brunette, was lovely in her wedding gown of cinnabar red velvet, with which she wore a close fitting turban fashioned of the same material as her dress and ornamented with a rhinestone clip and a short veil. Slippers matching her dress and beige gloves completed her costume. She carried an arm bouquet of Tullisman roses and Louise Schaling chrysanthemums, tied with ribbons harmonizing with her costume.

After ceremony an informal reception was held.

Mrs. Sale is the daughter of Mrs. Beulah Douglass Morrison and the late James Collins Morrison. She attended Mitchell College and for the past several years has served as office assistant for Dr. Chas. B. Herman.

Mr. Sale is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Sale of near Elkin. He was educated at North Carolina State College, Raleigh, and is associated with the Belk stores in Statesville.

Following a wedding trip through the mountains of Western North Carolina and Tennessee Mr. and Mrs. Sale will make their home in Statesville.
