MIRROR OF MEMORIES

You've heard us speak of an English friend with whom we used to work in Greensboro. He was living near London during the World War, but was on the under side of age and thus didn't go. Still, he had vivid memories of air raids by the German zeps, and after the war went to the battle fields of France to make pictures of hundreds of graves of British soldiers for the government.

At his home in Greensboro, surrounded by his wife and three charming little girls, he used to tell of England during the war. His wife, too, had vivid memories of life in London during that time, but when they spoke of it it was in the manner of telling of a horrible dream—of an experience that could never happen again.

After several years in the United States, my friend and his family moved back to England. And now his entire family has been fitted with gas masks; madness, provoked by a power-drunk madman, hovers over Europe, and there is threatened a new terror which would make the last war seem as child's play.

Each time a new crisis pops up, we can't help but think of Ken as he used to sit on a Sunday afternoon and tell of England during the World War.

THIS AND THAT

Have you heard that a manufacturer of radios is planning to put a new car on the market to sell between three and four hundred dollars, with a 2-cylinder motor, a top speed of 50 miles per hour and a gas mileage of 50 miles to the gallon? They say it's due soon.

Have you heard Leon Martin's "Search for Talent" program Sundays at 3:30 p.m. over WAIR, Winston? Leon acts as MC and does a bit of singing as the show moves along. Last week he had Virginia Lineberry, Dorothy Colhard and Gerry Weaver. He has big things planned if the breaks fall right.

Did you know that so-and-so is planning a new building at such-and-such a place to house a something-or-other business? Or so it is rumored? (That's about as definite as things are around here lately, but don't let it worry you, for it's certainly not worrying us.)

We know of five new houses ready to be put in construction right away. If the owners are wanting to sell, we'd be glad to talk to them, action guaranteed.

This cool weather we've been having lately should provide quite a crop of chill bumps down at Mocksville's nudist colony.

A traffic officer stopped Rastus at the curb and asked him:

"Well, suh," Rastus replied, "Ah saw'd white folks goin' through the green 'un, an' Ah thought 'd red 'un was foh me."
