surviving jungle monsters and of the savage human beings that ventured to settle on his island.

Then in A. D. 1933 a party of motion picture folk arrived to make a film, along with them being a beautiful fair-haired American girl. He captured her. He held the tiny creature, no more than five feet in stature, in the hollow of his hand as a man would lift a beetle, and marvelled.

From this point, "King Kong's" adventures became united with those of Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong and Bruce Cabot. Back to the screen to thrill the public once more, this amazing movie will be shown here at the Elk theatre Thursday, June 8, matinee and night.

"KING KONG" TO BE AT ELK HERE

Thrilling Movie of Monster Ape As Big As a Battleship Coming June 8th

FAY WRAY IS IN CAST

"King Kong," whose amazing career was climaxed melodramatically by a plunge from the highest skyscraper in New York, was born some seven million years ago on Skull Island, located indefinitely off the Malay Peninsula.

"Kong" was a rather large baby, weighing somewhat over a ton at birth. He soon became an orphan, his parents being slain in a terrific battle with a tyrannosaurus weighing nearly thirty tons.

"Kong" was the last of his prehistoric ape race. In shifting for himself, battling for existence against now extinct monsters, he narrowly escaped death several times, and outlasted his foes. When only about 200 years old, and still somewhat tender, he had an adventure with a pterodactyl, giant flying reptile, that might have ended his life. But he was lucky and clever, and not only vanquished the winged monster but gathered its eggs for his breakfast.

As millions of years went by he grew huge and strong and king of his domain—king among the few
