

This Week IN WASHINGTON

Washington, August 15 — The first session of the 76th Congress adjourned with two events attending further spread of anti-New Deal sentiment among Senators and Representatives alike.

The President's bill to authorize the borrowing of 3 3/4 billions of the securities of Government-controlled corporations and agencies, for the purpose of lending the funds for a wide variety of purposes in the effort to stimulate business, was killed by the refusal of a coalition of Republicans and Conservative Democrats to permit its consideration by the House, even after the Senate had agreed upon the measure in a modified form, involving only about half as much money as the President had asked for.

Another important measure behind which all the forces of the Administration lined up against the opposition, met the same fate. That was the bill to double the borrowing and lending powers of the U. S. Housing Administration, engaged in so-called "slum-clearance" projects of building low-rent homes for the poor.

A combination of motives entered into this final revolt against the Administration. There was a genuine feeling on the part of economy-minded members of both houses that the time had come to stop Government spending-for-recovery.

Wide-spread Revolt
There was an even more wide-spread revolt against the idea of increasing the national debt by borrowing in the name of corporations or agencies, whose debts would not be included in the official Public Debt statements, on the theory that the proceeds of their lending would be used to finance self-liquidating projects.

Besides economic objections to the President's program, further opposition was inspired by objections to the President's policies in general.

There was also an element of personal revenge on the part of certain Democratic Senators and Representatives who were the object of the Presidential enmity in last year's elections, and who survived his so-called "purge" of the party leadership.

All those things combined with previous actions of the Congress to make the ending of this session a fairly complete defeat of the New Deal.

The way is now cleared for consideration of the prospects for the 1940 Presidential election, and that is what will engage the whole attention of official Washington and of the Senators and members back in their home states from now on. The battle for delegates to the nominating conventions of both major parties is already beginning.

Fear Roosevelt
It can be set down as a certainty that the man whom all Republicans fear most as the Democratic candidate is President Roosevelt himself. If he does decide to break the precedent first formulated by the founder of his own party, and run for a third term, it is conceded that he will be the hardest man for the Opposition to beat.

There are careful observers, professing to be able to read the political signs, who hold that the President is merely waiting until the time is right to announce that he will not be a candidate to succeed himself. Such tactics, it is pointed out, would prevent too great concentration of delegates behind any other individual who might be distasteful to the President, and so increase his chance of having a candidate of his choice named, in the last-minute confusion just before the convention.

The candidate who is now coming to be regarded as the President's choice is Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt. He is the only Democrat with any considerable vote-gathering ability who might have Mr. Roosevelt's blessing. In actual political strength at the moment, however, Vice-President Garner is away out in the lead, on the Democratic side.

On the Republican side, the outstanding candidate of the moment is Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, son of former President Taft. The Ohio primaries come among the earliest of any of the states, and the Hamilton County (Cincinnati) Republican Committee has already begun its campaign to win the primaries for its fellow-citizen, Senator Taft. It couldn't go ahead without the Senator's written consent, and he gave it in a strong statement at the New Deal, adding that the tacking the Administration and task which lies ahead of the next President is so great that no sensible man could be eager to assume it.

Dewey Strong
None of the other potential Republican candidates has announced so far. A strong organization is being built up around and Washington hears that some-Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, thing in the nature of a "brain trust" of economists and political advisers is at work preparing a series of public speeches which Mr. Dewey will make in the Fall, to put his personal political philosophy on record.

Very far from being in the background is Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, with probably more practical politicians of his own party working for him than for any other Republican.

There is a perceptible under-swell of sentiment for Governor Saltonstall of Massachusetts. Governor Bricker of Ohio must not be overlooked. He is believed to be receptive and is known to be a good campaigner. For the first time since 1928, Republicans believe, and Washington observers agree with them, the party has at least an even chance of winning in 1940. Otherwise there would not be so many candidates for the driver's seat.

Some observers here think they see signs of a tide of public sentiment running in Mr. Hoover's direction.

A. O. BRYAN SAYS:
"HERE'S WHAT I MEAN BY SERVICE..."

This word "service" is one of those things some people haven't any business fooling with. They haven't any more idea of its meaning than a hog has of a holiday.

SERVICE, as I see it, is pretty near a part of my religion. It starts a long time before you come to me for tires. It starts with the tires I carry in stock.

I've chosen to sell Goodyears because I've had YOU in mind all the time. I've figured, "there's a fellow who's going to need good tires some day, and I'm going to give him the best tire value he can buy."

That's the kind of tires Goodyear builds and I sell. But I wouldn't be satisfied if my service stopped there. I like to feel RESPONSIBLE for your driving comfort, your safety and freedom from tire-worries AS LONG AS THOSE TIRES ARE ON YOUR CAR.

All I've learned in years of this work belongs to you and the rest of my customers. That's why I'm always glad to have you drive in and let me make sure everything is right.

Maybe I still don't get my point across. Well, actions speak louder than words, and I'd rather GIVE service than talk about it any day.
