This Week IN WASHINGTON

Washington, Sept. 12—In the diplomatic moves and parleys which have kept the whole world stirred up for the past few weeks the United States has played a far more important part than is generally realized. Its influence has been thrown on the side of England and France and definitely against Germany, to the point where the European democracies are beginning to feel that this country is definitely committed to give them the fullest support to the very end.

That is distinctly a wrong impression. No commitment to take up arms to fight the battles of any other nation has been made and none can be made by any authority but the Congress of the United States.

It would take a great deal more provocation than has been given so far to arouse the American people to the point of going to war. But in definitely showing sympathy with the democratic powers as against the dictatorships, the Administration's moves have had the effect of strengthening the morale of Britain and France, and, it is believed by highly-placed men in the State Department, of breaking down the morale of Hitler and Mussolini.

To Prevent War
The purpose of this Government is to prevent war, if that is possible, while at the same time preparing our national defense in case we should be dragged into war, and formulating a definite foreign policy which would be acceptable to everybody, a policy which would tend to keep us out of war rather than drive us toward it.

Nobody can say with certainty how much the several appeals for peace sent to the Central Powers by President Roosevelt have had a definite influence.

The general approval of the President's urgent plea for conference and negotiation between the conflicting interests in Europe is believed to have had considerable effect.

The President's direct appeal to the King of Italy has served to remind many Americans who had almost forgotten it that Italy is, after all, a sovereignty with a king at its head and that Mussolini is merely the king's prime minister, who can be dismissed without notice at any time if he gets the nation into trouble.

The information which Washington gets from Europe indicates that the Italian government is beginning to realize that it is on the spot, and that its continued support of Hitler is increasingly doubtful.

Historically, northern Italy has always been a major battleground for every great European war. And the action of the President in denouncing the treaty between the United States and Japan has made Italy's coast defense a very serious problem.

Explains Attitude
That takes a little explaining. As the foreign experts in Washington figure it, Japan, as an ally of Germany and Italy, undertook to make such demonstrations against British interests in China and the Far East that it would be necessary for the British fleet to be divided to protect the strategic outposts of the Empire. That would prevent the concentration of British warships in the Mediterranean, and leave Italy free to lend a hand to Hitler.

But when the United States took a strong attitude in opposition to Japan, the whole picture changed. Japan realized that it might have to face the United States fleet, not the British, and immediately began to pull in its horns.

Aggressions against the British in China slackened or ceased entirely, and the Japanese government began to make extraordinary efforts to cultivate American friendship anew. On top of that came the announcement of an alliance between Germany and Russia.

Enemy of Japan
Now, Russia is the traditional enemy of Japan, and the Japanese government is not at all happy over the idea of continuing an alliance with Germany while Russia is in the same picture.

Therefore, Japan has begun to sing small, the British have not found it necessary to send any part of their Mediterranean fleet into Chinese waters, and Italy, almost an island, is surrounded by the ships of the most powerful sea power in the world, with France ready to jump her from the first crack of a gun.

That is the way the diplomatic soothsayers in the State Department figure it out that Italy would be crazy to throw in with Germany in a war against England and France, and they believe that Italy realizes that and will make as graceful an exit as circumstances permit when the blow-off comes.

All of which, Administration spokesmen point out, is a triumph for American diplomacy, a result of the bold action of the President in breaking off treaty relations with Japan without advance notice to anybody.
