

HILLS OF DESTINY
BY AGNES LOUISE PROVOST

CHAPTER XIII

By the time she had reached a side door and flung it open the sounds of activity were already coming from the bunk house. There was a man there on a horse—it looked like Brimstone—and other men were tumbling out of the door half dressed and gathering around him. She herself was running now with leaden weights dragging at her feet.

It was Brimstone, glistening with the sweat of hard riding, but the man just dismounting from him was Francisco Ramirez.

Curly came running. He talked rapidly, giving her the blunt truth. "It's Lee. Francisco was goin' home late and he saw Brimstone in front of the cabin all saddled, but no sign of Lee. Francisco went up and found the cabin empty and blood on the saddle."

"Do you suspect anyone, Curly?"

"We're lookin' first for Lawler and Clanty Gano. They both held grudges against Lee, and they'd better hunt up their alibis right now."

Bradish and Stanley had hurried out and were at her elbow. Stanley had a sickly look in the pale moonlight. The riding men streamed down the valley. Virginia turned to Stanley.

"The ranch car is in the repair shop. We'll have to take yours. I'm going to drive it myself."

In a few minutes Virginia had the grey car out and was slipping into the driver's seat. Curly started to protest against her going, but stopped as he looked into a stony little face. He took the seat beside her. Bradish, on a restless impulse, got in also, followed by Stanley.

From far away Slanty Gano saw the rolling crowd of dust speeding out from the Valley of the Sun and resolving itself into a racing car.

Slanty had the eyes of a hawk. He saw that it was young Bradish's car, but what was it doing there at this hour, and going at that rate of speed? And it was full. He turned back to deeper shelter, caught a sound and stiffened.

Horses! He dismounted, wormed his way to a point of vantage and peered.

Coming out of the mouth of Turkey Gulch were men. They were Circle V men and they rode with a purpose, scanning trail and hillside.

Crouched low in his covert between the rolling dust cloud and the riding men, with a deed in his pocket bearing the smeared imprint of a bloody thumb, Slanty knew that he was a fugitive.

At the ranch house relations between the inmates were noticeably strained, but Virginia saw little of the others. They would all have departed gladly, but to leave just now might create an unpleasant impression or even definitely arouse suspicion in this place where feeling was running so high. The Archers fussed around anxiously. Bradish was bluntly rude to his now useless agent, and Stanley was nervously on edge. There were several matters that were worrying him badly, and one of them was a thousand dollar bill. If they should catch Gano and find that bill on him, Stanley Bradish was going to have a bad time trying to explain it.

The second day dragged out to ghastly length, but there was no trace of Lee, and no sign of Slanty Gano or Lawler. Men began to shake their heads. There were plenty of places around here where a man's body might be hidden for a year or two.

Only Virginia and one other refused to believe that Lee was dead. The other came at dusk and touched her arm shyly with a little brown hand.

"I not hate you any more. My heart it break for you, and for Lee. I help you fin' heem."

"Thanks, Josefa." Virginia held the small hand closely.

In the black tunnel of the Bonanza a gaunt shadow of a man lay. Years ago Don Luis' reckless mining had turned his own claim and Matt's into a maze of intersecting tunnels, and through these Lee staggered and crawled, now fainting, now stumbling to his feet again, but somehow keeping a sense of direction in a head which one moment felt like a lump of lead and the next like a floating feather. He was hunting for a gleam of light or a breath of cool air, but neither came.

Presently he lost all sense of time. He did not know that it was the noon of the second day which found him back at the place where Slanty had left him.

Even as he worked, men were passing through Turkey Gulch, less than a hundred yards away. One of the deputies looked up at the yawning black hole.

"No chance of anybody hiding in the old Bonanza, is there?" Curly shook his head. "I was up there yesterday with the sheriff. Ye can't get but a little ways in. Both tunnels is blocked by cave-ins."

They rode on. Back in the rubble-choked tunnel the digging hands had stopped. Lee was sinking down, down, into that deadening coma of weakness and exhaustion.

Long hours of hiding had not improved Slanty Gano's temper, and Lawler also was visibly soured. He was stretched out indolently, half sitting, half sprawling, just inside of a narrow crevice some forty feet above the floor of a secluded little box canyon. It was a perfect hideout.

From where he lay on a pile of boughs, Slanty sent a jeering taunt at his fellow fugitive.

"Ye talk big, but I notice ye keep on skulkin'." The Circle V boys has found out that ye set that fire."

"It wouldn't have done nothin' but burn off some grazin' if the wind hadn't freshed up," retorted Lawler sullenly. "And I notice there's two of us skulkin'." It's you them boys are after. You've done for Lee Hollister. Didn't I hear what they said, passin' not twenty feet away from us—"

"Maybe ye'll remember that yore name was mentioned as well as mine." Slanty arose deliberately and faced his partner with a hard stare. "Where was ye Wednesday night, Lawler? Got an alibi?"

Slanty's voice was menacing, his head was thrust forward and his eyes bored into the stupidly staring ones of his slower witted companion.

"Better get your own alibi," snarled Lawler, but his voice was uncertain. Sticking doggedly to his one idea of ingratiating himself with Milton Bradish by piling up discouraging losses on the present owner of the Circle V, he had spent the night cutting out a bunch of Virginia's cattle and wantonly slaughtering them in a remote coulee. There had been a splash of blood on his shirt when he had returned in the early morning, to flee at the sight of those riding men. He wore his coat buttoned now to cover the stain.

Presently Slanty went to where Lawler lay and put a hand on his shoulder as if to shake him awake. The sleeping man did not stir. From a hiding place inside his shirt Slanty took out a folded paper and slipped it cautiously into Lawler's inner pocket. Then he arose lightly and went to the crevice that served them as a doorway.

Morning sunshine brightened the secretive little canyon. Down there two horses were picketed, well hidden from any casual eye, but only one of them was fit for travel. Lawler had ridden his horse lame on Wednesday night and the foot was getting bad.

But Slanty knew what Lawler did not. There were two other horses not far away in a hidden corral. Slanty had more than once found it expedient to change mounts quickly.

When Lawler awoke, hours later, the sun was slantly westward and Slanty apparently was asleep. Lawler came softly to his feet and edged toward the narrow exit. With a quick glance over his shoulder, he let himself down. Leading the fresh horse, Lawler picked his stealthy way out of the box canyon, hugging the rock wall.

He recalled feeling something stiff in an inside pocket of his coat as he had swung himself over the edge of the cave floor.

The paper that he drew out was puzzling. It was a neatly folded, legal looking document, with printing on the back and a single word standing out boldly: DEED.

Other words caught his eye—"Matthew Blair"—"Lee Hollister." Beneath the word Hollister was the blurred imprint of a bloody thumb.

Panic swept over Lawler. Fire and slaughtered cattle, and in his possession the blood-smeared property of a murdered man. What little head Lawler had, he lost. Cursing Slanty Gano and his horse, he mounted hastily and bolted for deeper shelter.

As he rode he caught sight of a dozen men pounding along behind him. He crouched low over his horse's neck, cursing. All he could do now was to ride. Then the grade dropped suddenly. There was a lurch and a stumble. The horse went down and lay there. Lawler was flung free and staggered to his feet. He ran like a panic-stricken animal.

A few moments later the foremost of his pursuers flung themselves off their horses and looked down. Many feet below them a human fly clung to a rock wall. One man drew a gun.

"Hold on! He won't get away. He's done for!" They watched him fall, turning, swooping, head down.

They stepped back and looked at one another. One of the young deputies spoke.

"It looks as if that settled it, boys. An innocent man don't take a chance like that. Where's that white thing he dropped?"

Someone found it in a clump of scrub. They crowded together looking at a blood-stained deed, and exchanged hard glances.

"No doubt about it now," said the young deputy slowly. "The search is over."

Each day Virginia had stopped for a little while at Lee's empty cabin, opening the door with the persisting, unreasonable hope that he might have found his way back there.

For that very reason the blank finality of Curly's news about Lawler seemed crueler and harder to comprehend.

He saw that she wanted only to be alone, and he left her. She could hear him riding down to the mouth of Turkey Gulch, and then it was quiet again. She hurried toward her horse.

As she mounted, her little first aid kit bumped uselessly against her side. She had packed it so carefully—bandages, iodine, restoratives, matches for a fire, a tin of broth, fresh every day. In one pocket was a flashlight for dark places, in another a policeman's whistle to call help to Lee. Futile little toys! She gave Black Lightning his head, riding blindly.

The ragged scar of the Bonanza came into view, and Virginia remembered Joey, searching patiently and futilely for evidence in the loneliness of the old tunnel. She snapped on the flash as soon as she had gone a little way in.

The pencil of white light flickered over rock walls and rubble-strewn floor, but there was no sign of Joey.

Just ahead there was a darkly looming bulk which must mark the spot where the big cave-in blocked all further ingress to the mine. The white beam danced along the face of the slide. Earth, stones, rubble. It switched down, up, jerked suddenly and came back, searching wildly. Protruding stiffly from the piled earth and stone, gaunt and torn, blood-crusted and earth stained, motionless, was a human hand.

Yesterday that hand had not been there!

(Continued Next Week)

Royalair
A VERSATILE HOME CLEANING SYSTEM
LIGHT-IN-WEIGHT EASY TO OPERATE ALMOST NOISELESS POWERFUL EFFICIENT
Built by ROYAL
* Complete with patented Sweep Action Carpet Nozzle, Hose, Wand, Filter and Upholstery Nozzle
$39.95
TOOLS SHOWN IN CIRCLES ARE EXTRA

HARRIS ELECTRIC COMPANY
Phone 250 Elkin, N. C.
Say, "I saw it in The Tribune." Thanks!

THE LYRIC
ALWAYS COMFORTABLE
Natural, True to Life SOUND

MOVIES
Are Your Best Form of Entertainment

TODAY (THURSDAY) ONLY—

The HONEYMOON'S OVER

when STUART ERWIN can't make the income come in faster than the outgo goes out!

when MARJORIE WEAVER discovers a difference between romance in an office and love in a cottage!

ON THE STAGE
ELKIN BEAUTY CONTEST
WHO WILL BE "MISS ELKIN?"

Also News — Admission 10c-25c

SATURDAY—

Charles STARRETT

In "BULLETS For BANDITS"

Cartoon - Serial - Comedy — Adm. 10c-30c

MONDAY-TUESDAY—(NEXT WEEK)—

THE YEAR'S MOST Mysterical MYSTERY

Edgar BERGEN • Charlie MCCARTHY
MORTIMER SNERD
CHARLIE MCCARTHY, DETECTIVE
with ROBERT CUMMINGS
CONSTANCE MOORE

Original story by Robertson White and Darrell Ware
Screenplay by EDWARD ELISCU, HAROLD SHUMATE and RICHARD MACK Produced and Directed by FRANK TUTTLE • A NEW UNIVERSAL PICTURE
News - Cartoon — Admission 10c-30c

WEDNESDAY—FAMILY SHOW—

It's Coming Again! Tell Your Friends!
"BANJO ON MY KNEE"

Cartoon - Serial — Admission 10c to All

FRIDAY ONLY—

SONJA HENIE
EVERYTHING HAPPENS at NIGHT

Selected Shorts — Admission 10c-25c

LYRIC THEATRE

Only Chevrolet has
"THE RIDE ROYAL"

—because only Chevrolet has all these modern features which make it possible!

Eye it... Try it... Buy it!

$659
MASTER 85 BUSINESS COUPE

Other models slightly higher
*All models priced at Flint, Michigan. Transportation based on rail rates, state and local taxes (if any), optional equipment and accessories—extra. Prices subject to change without notice.

"CHEVROLET'S FIRST AGAIN!"
LEADER IN SALES . . . 8 OUT OF THE LAST 9 YEARS

F-W CHEVROLET CO.
Phone 255 Elkin, N. C.

The Master De Luxe Town Sedan, $725*

Chevrolet's PERFECTED KNEE-ACTION (on Special De Luxe and Master De Luxe Series) is assembled as an integral unit complete in itself, to assure perfect balance and, therefore, perfect springing, steering and braking in each individual car.

Chevrolet's STABILIZED FRONT END—with radiator, hood, headlights and fenders firmly and securely bound together in a rigid framework of structural steel, gives true front-end stability.

Chevrolet's AUTOMATIC RIDE STABILIZER, attached to the front end of the chassis frame, and linked to the lower Knee-Action member, imparts genuine steadiness on curves and sharp turns!

Chevrolet's SCIENTIFICALLY BALANCED SPRINGS, with double-acting shock absorbers, and with spring action varying automatically according to load and deflection, assure uniform riding smoothness at all times.

Chevrolet's BALANCED WEIGHT DISTRIBUTION in this LONGEST OF ALL LOWEST-PRICED CARS gives that scientific distribution of weight over front and rear springs so essential to a smooth, level ride.

Chevrolet's RIGID ALL-STEEL BODY and BOX-GIRDER FRAME—the strongest and most rigid body and frame construction known to modern automotive engineering—adds that final degree of comfort and safety which spells today's finest ride . . . "Chevrolet's Ride Royal!"