PACIFYING AN ENEMY

Not long ago Cameron Shipp, an editor of "The Charlotte News," Charlotte, North Carolina, took his vacation back in the mountains of Macon County, North Carolina. It was his first visit among the mountain people, and he didn't realize they had a code of ethics all their own.

He saw a mountaineer brought in for trial. The state claimed that this mountaineer had set fire to the woods. With him came his friends and relatives ready to fight at the drop of the hat. Some had walked 20 miles over the mountains.

The evidence heard, the mountaineer was found guilty; sentenced to the chain gang. His fiery daughter was present. She bawled. So these city slickers were going to put her pappy in the chain gang, were they? Well, nobody was going to touch her daddy without a fight.

Two deputy sheriffs brought the old man out of jail and started him toward the car which was to haul him off to the chain gang. The girl rushed up to the sheriffs and pleaded with them to turn her father loose. Of course the sheriffs couldn't. She saw red. Her father going to the chain gang! The bullies! She implored them to free her father. Again they refused.

Then she went into action. She pounded the men. She clawed. She poked and punched and eye-gouged until she made them let loose her pappy. Then she proudly marched the old man down the road to freedom.

Cameron Shipp saw this dramatic bit of mountain chivalry and wrote a piece about it for the newspaper.

A few days later the town was full of mountaineers. Somebody had found the piece and read it to them. And marching at the head of the mountaineers was the indignant daughter. So the newspaper had made fun of her pappy, had it?

Cameron Shipp heard her demand the name of the man who wrote the article. She meant business. And so did her relatives. Shipp was frightened for a moment. Should he run? No, he decided to go out and face the girl and make her see his point of view. A tough assignment!

"I am the man who wrote that piece," he said to her. "I wrote it because I admire you. We need more girls like you—girls who will fight for their parents. I am proud of you and I wanted to tell everybody about your fighting spirit. You've got backbone—and courage; and that is what this country needs today."

The fighting look passed from the girl's eyes. Here was somebody who appreciated her point of view.

"I want to tell the whole state of North Carolina about you," said Shipp. "I want to write an article about you for Asheville and Raleigh papers."

This girl who came in to fight him and scratch out his eyes, was beaming now. "If you put it in them papers, could you give me copies?" she asked.

Shipp had won the good will of an enemy by giving her appreciation. In almost any situation, if you tell another something you like about him, it will do more for you than almost anything else.

Was a Pity

The elderly English lady was talking over matters and expressing her approval of the League of Nations. "I think," she said, "it is a pity to have so many foreigners in it!"

denn private property for public uses," Justice Stacy wrote. "It is for the General Assembly to say whether, in the particular case or under certain conditions, the power shall be enlarged to embrace public property and property devoted to a public use . . ."

The chief justice also held that the Yadkin, or Pee Dee river "appeared to be" a non-navigable stream, and that High Point exceeded its authority in agreeing to abide by conditions imposed in a federal power commission license to construct the dam.

"The federal power commission is not a party to the proceeding, and the validity of its license is not an issue," he wrote. "The inquiry goes only to the authority of the city of High Point to agree to abide by its terms and conditions."

checks and two notes, one for $100 and the other for $60.00.

An immediate investigation was made by Policeman Corbett Wall and State Highway Patrolman Lee Phillips, who summoned a fingerprint expert from Raleigh. Numerous fingerprints were obtained from the safe, but insofar as is known have revealed no clue as to the identity of the thieves.

An examination of the safe door revealed that it had not been blown with nitroglycerin, as was first supposed. The examination also revealed that the robbers had first attempted to drill into the safe at a point to the right of the combination dial. However, the hole was on the left side, between the dial and the safe handle. The hole was drilled exactly where it would do the most good.

Entry to the store was through the rear door, a pipe wrench or some other tool having been used, it is believed, to twist the lock of the door sufficiently for it to be opened. This door, of a type which opens upward through use of springs and counter-balancing weights, was open about four inches when the robbery was discovered, it was said.

Officers declined to state whether they expected a break in the case any time soon.

Probe in Death Of Negro Ended

Investigation into the instant death of Allen Glover, 24, who was killed near Reavis filling station two miles south of Brooks Cross Roads Wednesday morning, has come to a halt, after both remaining negroes who occupied the liquor laden car said Glover was driving the car when it went out of control and threw him against a tobacco pack house while the car was being chased by Darwin Hayes, an Iredell county deputy sheriff, and Ralph Albea, his companion.

Roosevelt Allridge, also of Winston-Salem, was seriously injured and Sylvester Grant, the third occupant of the car, was arrested Thursday in Winston-Salem by Sheriff A. L. Inscore and placed in Yadkin jail.

Coroner R. V. Long said if Glover, the dead negro, was driving the car his investigation was at an end.

Coroner Long and Sheriff Inscore said they did not know why the Iredell county deputy was chasing cars in Yadkin county. Early arrivals at the scene said 10 of the five-gallon cans containing liquor were burst. It was not learned what went with the other two cans.

Good of Drivers.

Izzat: Is there anything good that can be said about auto drivers?

Izzard: Yes, they don't seem to care about killing themselves any more than they seem to care about killing others.
