Amsterdam, May 8.—The Dutch government maintained precautions against invasion from any quarter today, despite new assurances from European belligerents that the Netherlands was in no immediate danger.

A check of the provinces showed all was quiet and both Berlin and Paris spokesmen took the position that there seemed to be no threat at present to the low countries.

The country was still tense and somewhat nervous, however, as a result of sudden military precautions.

Leaves of all men of the fighting forces had been cancelled. Members of anti-aircraft units and searchlight batteries who had been released to work in war production factories were recalled to military duty. Key rivers and canals had been closed to foreign traffic and ships in them immobilized.

Train and boat services had been restricted because of troop movements.

(There had been reports outside Holland that German troops were marching toward the Dutch frontier. It had been supposed for months that Germany had maintained about 1,000,000 men on the frontier.)

Telephone calls to and from foreign countries had been sharply restricted during the night and some calls had even been cut off.

When found, the body was said to be resting on its side as if the man had pitched forward into the ditch.

Mr. Sprinkle, disappeared from home Sunday and when he failed to return a search was instituted. It was said that searchers followed his tracks to the scene of his death.

The deceased is survived by his widow and six children. No funeral arrangements had been made late Wednesday evening.
