THE DOCTOR Tells the Story

by W.E. AUCHINBAUGH M.D.

DRIVERS' TESTS

The question of making a physical, as well as an optical and aural examination of drivers of automobiles and trucks, before issuing licenses, has been repeatedly suggested as a measure of safety for both the driver and the public. Recently so many accidents due to some physical imperfection in the driver or from auto-fatigue—a newly recognized condition—have resulted in efforts being made to study the subject scientifically, with a view to ascertaining how these elements of danger in driving may be entirely eliminated or else greatly reduced.

Physical Examinations

Beyond question, every man, woman, or youth to whom an automobile license is granted, should first submit to a thorough physical examination before a competent and unbiassed board of medical men. Defects of vision or in hearing or a lack of co-ordination between the brain of the driver and his muscular control of the car should positively prohibit him from getting a license.

I know one young man who seems to lack co-ordination between his brain and his muscles to such an extent that within ten months he has been in ten accidents, three of them almost fatal—and he is a non-drinker. He should never have been given a permit to drive a car.

Heart Attacks

Many persons, especially those over 60 years of age, are liable to have heart attacks, or else apoplectic strokes which may cause them to either kill or maim themselves or others. It is for this reason that there are always two men in the cab of a locomotive—the fireman and the engineer—both qualified to run the train.

Recently Dr. A. H. Ryan, an eminent physiologist, had five young, strong men, in perfect physical condition, drive five different makes of autos a distance of 80,000 miles each, to obtain authentic data regarding auto-fatigue and accidents. Every move made by these men was scientifically checked, such, for instance, as hand and eye co-ordination, postural steadiness, body sway, complex reactions and visual activity.

Identical Conditions

Each day's run covered a distance of 250 to 300 miles, over the same route in identical weather conditions. Even the number of steering wheel movements were recorded as well as a restlessness movement test, which showed that these movements increased with growing fatigue. They took to the road at 8 a.m. and the most hazardous time of the day was found to be between 4:45 and 6:15 p.m., after which a true danger period was reached. Accidents, it was found, always happened when the driver had some unusual and abnormal mental strain or muscular stress.
