COMMISSIONERS' SALE.

Got His Start

By LOUISE THORNTON

Jean Teterault, a French Canadian boy, was born with un ambition not usual to those of French descent in the Dominion. He decided to leave the lit. Chickens-Grown, pair..... tle patch of ground his father worked, ed career. Eat what could the boy Ducks, per pair..... do? He had but little education and was only lifteen years old. True, he Hams, country, smoked, lb... was big and strong for his age, but Beeswax, lb..... what is physical strength in the world's Wool, just received. Give us your next railroad, and Jean would have liked Beef, dressed, lb...... By virtue o the authority conferred ployed by the road told him that even if he found employment as a railroad man he would grow gray in the service with but a meager salary. The railroad ran through a cut near North Carolina, at the September the Teterault farm, and on the knoll Sweet potatoes, bushel. through which it passed was a walnut Rutabagas, hundred and stood under the tree, talking with one another. Jean kept quiet and listened. From what the men said be gathered that they were intending to stop a train due in a short time and rob the express car.

A man who was evidently in charge and East Front streets and adjoining the city of New Bern, beginning at a assigned the positions. One was to go point on the south side of Cypress in the direction from which the train was expected and flag it, so that it would come to a halt in the cut. Another was to tackle the engineer and kill him if necessary; another was to look out for the conductor, while the leader was to rob the express car.

Jean, if the men had gone far enough away from the tree to permit him, would have descended and run through a wood that skirted the track ahead of the man who was to flag the train and given a warning. There was a bend in the road that would have rendered this quite easy. But the men did not go away, and when the train was heard in the distance all put on masks and got their weapons in readiness for a tight.

When the train came to a stop the express car was directly beneath the tree in which Jean was lodged. He saw a man call on the engineer and fireman to come out of the cab, and the order was obeyed. They were marched toward the rear of the train, where they could not get back into the engine. The leader of the gang was endeavoring to get into the rear door of the express car, which had been locked. Jean noticed that there was not a person between this robber 13th day of April 1908 the same being and the locomotive. It occurred to him that he might scramble down to the locomotive, get aboard and pull the train on. But this would probably avail nothing. If he could first uncouple the express car so as to leave the passenger cars he might carry the robber away from his supporters. The scheme was fascinating. Jean drew three or four long breaths. A resolution was forming Within him-a resolution which might mean his death. There was no time to lose. The chief robber was calling to one of his men in the rear to go into the wood and get a piece of timber with which to batter down the door of the express car. Some of the passengers had thrust their heads out of the car windows. They would see him run down to the train, but the robbers were occupied. Dropping from the tree, he rolled down the declivity, crawled under the express car and wriggled on his stomach to the rear end. The old fashioned coupling was then still in use, and Jean watching his opportunity when the robber above him was engaged, reached up and removed the pin. Then, scuttling rapidly under the car to its front end, he climbed up to the platform and over the rear end of the tender. Jean, having lived beside the railroad e essary expense of the first Tuesday in May, 1913, o and in luding the following Saturday, battering of the first Street and and so the plan of that part of the source of o'clock p. m. e.ch day.
