MENTAL DEFECTIVES.

were abnormal. Of those arrested twice, the percentage of abnormal rises to 73.8; of those arrested three times, 85.3, and of those arrested four times, 90.3 were psychopathological cases. That means that nine out of ten of the prisoners in these institutions who might fall into the classification of 'habitual offenders' are mentally defective.

"It is clear, therefore, that in dealing with recidivists one is not dealing with normal indiciduals, but with a group least likely to profit by modes of punishment or well-intentioned but largely misapplied efforts at 'reformation.' It is not a problem easy of solution, for these prisoners cannot be grouped under one heading and given the same treatment. They are individual cases, each with a special problem peculiar to itself.

"For that reason the committee's report suggests that steps be taken for the abandonment of county jails as places of punishment and that a new institutional system be erected. This system would provide first for a diagnostic clearing house, where prisoners would be sent for observation and study, classification and planning of treatment.

"It would provide also for institutions adequately equipped for vocational training and for industrial farms, both planned to meet the diverse needs of those to be trained. It would include the imposition by judges of truly indeterminate sentences. And the disposition of prisoners would be based on their needs as shown by observation and examination.

"Paroles would be granted only when the problem the prisoner presents, whether it be the comparatively simple one of occupation or training for a 'normal' individual or the more complicated one of mental disease or defect, has been sufficiently met to warrant the belief that he will be able to adjust himself acceptably in the community.

FLORIDA'S FUTURE.

Every day many ask, "How long will the present Florida boom last?" I asked it over and over when I was there to see if I could reach a satisfactory conclusion.

I traveled over a large part of the state with a real estate dealer, who knew the prices of property. He told me the banking houses were financing most of the large devolpments there, a fact which shows that they are undergirded by a substantial, permanent bedrock foundation. The banking houses must think the this great activity is grounded upon solid business basic principles, and is not a fleeting transient boom of a fickle imagination.

The fact that a great many successful. thoughtful, careful business men of the country have been to Florida and invested their money and many others are going there gives one confidence to do likewise. Hardly can a person be found who has not had personal observations of profits received by acquaintances and friends. Many millionaires and thousands of near-millionaires have been made there in the past year.

The orange and grapefruit production is source of big income of many millions.

The phosphate is in world demand and means many more millions.

The trucking industry of Florida in mid-winter, when most of America is "wrapped in its shroud of sleeted snow" and ice, it is said can be made to feed all America.

Many millions are realized from the sale of fish.

The rail and water transportation facilities and highway distribution produce many millions more.

It is said that manufacturing plants require less expensive buildings and less expense to keep comfortable in the warm climate of Florida.

I am expecting the scientific experts to give to America the result of their experiments in hastening the yield of latex and greatly reducing the cost of the production of rubber. Many have invested their money in Florida land and are planting rubber trees.

I believe almost every one called my attention to what they deemed their biggest asset—climate. They referred to Florida as "America's winter playground," "America's greatest human paradise," "America's heaven-favored spot."

Then, too, the developers of Florida have not neglected to capitalize our sense of appreciation of beauty. The sun-kissed trees, the palms, the flowers are everywhere adding to the charm that God graciously created purely for the pleasure of His children.

I heard someone say, "There is no use in Florida."

I believe we have just begun to appreciate our southern neighbor and that many who go there for their winter will make it their permanent home.
