MELROSE.

While Messrs, Wait Rollins and Waitsell Garrett were hauling coal for the Balfour Quarry Co., last Monday, one of their fine oxen was taken subdenly sick. Mr. Garrettwas despatched to Rockliff with care under sealed orders, but alas! e're he returned the poor beast was dead. It was at first suggested that the Coroner be summinged, but about this time Mr. Jim Hicks appeared on the scene and offered to act as Coroner for the time being. A "post office" examination was held over poor old Buck's remains and it was decided he died for the want of breath as there was no apparent sign that he had, any breath left. The pall bearers were Messrs. Rollins and Garrett, white took poor old Buck down the creek and left him in peace. Poor Buck is gone. Gone where he will never again feel the quick sting of the whip. Where he will never again have to carry the yoke from sun-up to sun-down and pull loads with no hope of a better day. Poor Buck! Peace to his ashes.
