New Kind of Love
Lesson for December 16, 1962

THERE are three ways of knowing what a thing is. First is by looking the word up in the dictionary, or to have some one tell us about it. Second comes the knowing which comes by looking at the thing itself. Best way of all is to have it, so to speak, as part of yourself. For instance, take "strength." Any dictionary will tell you what strength is, in carefully chosen words. You could then tell someone else what strength means, just your telling would be just a matter of remembering the right words. A better way would be harder to forget. Suppose you nearly drowned at a bathing beach, and a lifeguard rescued you. Then you would know what strength is, and you would always remember it, even if you forgot what the dictionary said. But the best way of all is to grow strong yourself. Then even if you lost your memory entirely, you would know what strength is.

Not in talk but in truth
Saint John is called the Apostle of Love, but he has no exclusive right to that honorable title. No one can read what Paul said in 1 Corinthians 13 for example, or Peter in 1 Peter 3:8, 9, or our Lord Himself in the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew 5), to mention only a few of the places regarding careful study) without seeing that all agree on this: Love is real when it becomes living acts, something more than a word. In fact, John contrasts love "in word or speech" with love "in deed and truth." As we were saying about strength, so with love. We know it a little from reading or hearing about it. We know it better when some one loves us; we know it best of all, not when we become eloquent about it but when what we do every day, the way we habitually move and think and act, the way we live, spells love so plainly no one can miss it. And now if someone complains that this is too high for us, let us freely confess: This kind of love is so rare as to be a new surprise every time we find it. But find it we do; for it is the signature of God. (Based on outlines copyrighted by the Division of Christian Education, National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.
