This Is The Law

By Robert E. Lee TRANSFER OF CONTRACTS During the early part of April, 1964, Ben Brown sold and delivered to Sam Smith 100 bushels of potatoes, which were warranted to be sound and of merchantable quality, for the sum of $100. There was an oral promise to pay for the potatoes on June 1, 1964. Ten days after the sale, Brown transferred or assigned his account receivable against Smith to Tom Tucker. Tucker paid to Brown $90 for the $100 obligation that Smith owed to Brown. Un known to Tucker, 40 per cent of the potatoes delivered to Smith were rotten and wholly valueless. How much, if anything, may Tucker recover from Smith?

Tucker can recover from Smith only $60. The account receivable which Tucker purchased is subject to Smith's defense of fraud or failure of consideration. Since the contractual right which Tucker purchased is in the form of a non-negotiable contract, notwithstanding the fact that he paid $90 for what he thought was a collectable $100 contract claim and was himself innocent of the fact that 40 percent of the potatoes were rotten, Tucker has acquired no better right against Smith than that which was possessed by Brown, his assignor.

In the above case, let us suppose that Smith had given to Brown a negotiable promissory note for $100, payable on June 1, 1964, in payment of the potatoes. The note is sold before maturity to Tucker for
