Vets Questions

Here are authoritative answers by the Veterans Administration to questions from former servicemen and their families:
Q--When will educational and training benefits expire for the veterans of the Korean Conflict?
A--The educational program for Korean veterans will expire on January 31, 1965. The educational program for World War II veterans has already expired.
Q--My husband's World War I insurance is more of a burden on our very limited finances. Will this ever be paid up?

A--Some types of insurance contracts are paid up after 20 or 30 years. If you cannot tell from reading the policy, you may write to the office to which you pay your premiums.
Q--In the case of a serviceman's death while he is on active duty, what are the limits of the Death Gratuity and who receives it?
A--The benefit is a sum equal to six months pay of the deceased. However, it shall not be less than $800 nor more than $3,000. It is paid to the surviving spouse, child or children unless the serviceman has designated his parents, brothers or sisters.
Q-I recently retired from Civil Service employment and am filing claim for non-service connected pension from the VA. Will my retirement pay be considered income for pension purposes?
A--Retirement benefits based on a claimant's own employment are not considered income until the amount of the claimant's personal contribution has been received. After he has received an amount equal to his personal contribution all payments will be considered income.

More than nine out of every ten breadwinners in this country are paying money out of their earnings for social security protection. How many workers and their families know what protection they are getting for their money?
Unfortunately, too many are unaware of this protection. Even one uninformed person would be too many. Are you this person?
With few exceptions, everyone must work to support himself and his family. Temporary interruption of the worker's earning creates hardship in many cases. Permanent interruption can cause disaster.
Permanent interruption occurs usually in one of three ways: the worker becomes too old to work, becomes too sick to work, or he passes away. When you buy social security, you buy protection for yourself and family against loss of earnings through retirement, disability, and death.
The benefit payments take the place of part of these lost earnings. This protection is paid for by the worker and belongs to him as a matter of right.
The retired man or woman worker may want to apply for social security benefits at age 62 if not working or working for low earnings. The amount of these monthly payments is somewhat less than it would be if the worker waited until age 65 to apply. However, it has been determined that on an overall basis, the average worker would receive the same total amount of money in his lifetime whether he elects the lower payment at age 62 or decides to wait until he is 65 to file.
In addition, the wives and children of retirees may also qualify for payments. A wife may get her benefit when she reaches 62, or at any age if she has children in her care drawing benefits. The wife who files at age 62 also accepts a smaller payment than if she had waited until 65. Children under the age of 18 would be eligible for payments as would an older child who became disabled before he was 18 years old.
If a worker becomes permanently and totally disabled, he may get disability benefits regardless of his age. The same members of his family may also be eligible to receive benefits in the case of the retired worker.

To be considered disabled under the social security law, the worker must be unable to do any substantial gainful work because of a physical or mental condition. The disability cannot be temporary, but must be one that is expected to continue indefinitely.
To be eligible for disability benefits, the worker must have worked under social security for at least half of the ten-year period just before becoming disabled.
If the worker dies leaving a young family, his widow and children are eligible to receive benefits until the youngest child becomes 18 years of age. If there was a child disabled before reaching 18, then benefits to that child continue as long as the disability lasts.
If there are no children eligible for benefits, the widow becomes eligible for monthly benefit when she becomes 62 years of age.
Also, the widow or widower of a deceased worker may receive a lump-sum death payment if they were living in the same household at the time of death. If there is no eligible spouse, the payment is used toward unpaid burial expenses or to reimburse those who paid the expenses. The lump sum death payment is also based on the workers record, but may not be more than $255. The lump sum payment does not interfere with monthly benefits that may be payable. A visit to your local social security office at 311 East Walnut Street in Goldsboro will provide the answers to any questions you may have regarding your own social security status.
