PINK HILL — Horace Grady, 31, Rt. 1, Pink Hill, died enroute to a Chapel Hill hospital early Monday morning of injuries received in an automobile accident Sunday night near Pink Hill.

Officers said Grady was traveling east on a rural paved road when his car ran off the highway on the left side and he lost control and overturned three times.

The officers said excessive speed was the probable cause of the accident, which occurred at about 11:30 p. m. Sunday. He was Lenoir County's 22nd highway fatality of 1964.

Grady received emergency treatment at a hospital in Kinston before he was sent to Chapel Hill.

Funeral services will be held at 11 a. m. Wednesday at Howard and Carter Funeral Home Chapel by the Rev. J. B. Starnes, pastor of the Kinston Free Will Baptist Church. Burial will be in Pinelawn Memorial Park in Pink Hill.

Health and Safety Tips

From The American Medical Association

Alcoholism is a growing disease problem confronted frequently by families, communities and physicians.

As with many other diseases it can be treated, but not really cured. The alcoholic can learn to completely control his disease, but the affliction cannot be stamped out so that he can return to alcohol without adverse consequences.

While the treatment primarily involves merely not taking a drink, the course of the treatment is often long, harrowing and beset by relapses. As with so many diseases, early detection usually brings about better results.

Among the signs of the disease are increased consumption of alcohol, often combined with constant thinking about drinking and making it an important part of life.

The alcoholic usually drinks more than he intends, or gets drunk when he doesn't intend to, for he uses alcohol as a drug rather than a beverage. Despite obvious excesses, however, he usually denies that he drinks too much or offers alibis for his drinking.

Other symptoms include getting drunk alone, taking an "eye-opener" in the morning, digestive disturbance and loss of appetite, and missing time from work or duties because of drinking.

Alcohol, aside from its addictive qualities, also has a psychological effect that modifies thinking and reasoning. One drink can change the thinking of an alcoholic so that he feels he can tolerate another, and then another, and another. Most alcoholics cannot break the cycle alone, for it means giving up the thing in life he wants most.

In addition the family can help by listening to his problems and helping him to face them realistically; encouraging him to help himself, but without scolding or lecturing him. And, when he gets up drinking, keep up his morale, emphasize his good points, not his bad ones. After all, he's sick, not wicked.

Mr. and Mrs. Byron Grady Simmons of Pink Hill announce the engagement of their daughter, Virginia Ann, to Mr. Ronnie Stokes Holt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holt of Pink Hill. A September 20 wedding is planned at the Presbyterian Church at Pink Hill.

Color and more color, combined with richer textures, are forecast for carpets this spring. Lush, velvety plushes made with Creslan acrylic fiber will be seen

Cooling Unit Can Utilize Heating Line

Cooling engineers have developed a variety of systems so that air conditioning can be installed in any type of house, regardless of the type of heating system used.

A combination hydronic system uses heating-cooling convectors units installed in each room of the house. The central power source — a boiler and water chiller — is usually located in the basement.

Hot water and chilled water are circulated to the units through a common tubing system. Each convector unit has a fan, filter, cooling-heating coil and a thermostat for room by room temperature control.

Same Ducts Used

Combination warm air systems use a furnace and cooling unit, usually located in the basement, as the power source. Warm air and cool air are circulated through the same duct system. It's important, however, that ducts be accurately sized. Cooling requires larger ducts than those used for heating alone. If ducts are sized for heating only, the cooling system may not operate efficiently.

Combination heating-cooling systems are not always more economical to install than separate heating and cooling systems. In certain types of construction, for instance, a separate hot water baseboard heating system with a separate cooling system may be more economical than a combination heating-cooling duct system.

To combine cooling equipment with a heating system at a later time, special provisions for air conditioning must be made when the house is constructed. If these provisions are not made, then a separate cooling system may be required.

Some cooling equipment is especially designed for installation independently of the heating system. This equipment also can be installed during construction or later.

For instance, a separate chilled air unit can be used with any type heating system since it functions independently of the heating system. This central cooling system is suitable for modernization in small or medium size houses.

Unit Placement

The cooling unit can be installed in unused space in the attic, garage, hall or closet. Cooling registers, or outlets, are usually located near the ceiling of each room.

A separate chilled water unit can also be used with any type of heating system. It also functions independently of the heating system, and is easily installed in homes located in regions not requiring heating. This unit is suitable for central cooling for new construction or modernization, but especially for multi-story or rambling designs in which some control is necessary for best results.

This system contains a single cooling unit, remotely located in the basement, which sends chilled water through small tubing to several heavy-duty convectors which have individual temperature controls.

Choosing Right Size Vital In Buying Air Conditioner

When buying a room air conditioner, it's important to select one with the right cooling power. There's no point in buying a 12,000 BTU/hr unit if an 8,000 BTU/hr unit will do the job. A unit with excessive cooling capacity won't do a better job, but it will cost more to buy and operate.

Room air conditioner dealers are equipped to advise families on what size units they'll need and where they should be installed, but dealers need information to arrive at an accurate estimate.

Pertinent Points

The homeowner should be able to tell a dealer:

1. The size and use of the area to be cooled.
2. Number and location of windows.
3. What exposure outside walls have to the sun.
4. Whether electric circuits are 115, 208 or 230 volts.
5. Whether ceiling or roof above is insulated.

The National Better Business Bureau, Inc., in a current booklet on room air conditioners, advises families to draw a simple floor plan to show the area to be cooled in relation to the rest of the house. Using the above information, a dealer can determine the cooling capacity needed in BTU's per hour.

Blend with Decor

Families who buy room air conditioners this year will find it's easier than ever to get a unit to meet specific cooling needs. In addition, many new room air conditioners blend better with the decor of a room.

The larger-capacity units are becoming increasingly popular. Often one or two units are installed in the walls while a house is being built to provide air conditioning for the entire house.

Some families place through-the-wall models under a window, while others prefer a spot high on a wall to provide maximum circulation of conditioned air.

New Room Units Take Less Space

Today's room air conditioners are more compact than those even a few years old, thanks to recent engineering developments. Some units are designed to fit flush, or nearly flush with both the inside and outside walls.

Both window and through-the-wall units are available in new colors, finishes and materials, and feature styling that makes them look more like an integral part of a room. Some are now designed to blend with period or modern furniture.

Room air conditioners are available to meet virtually any cooling situation. Families can choose between standard window units or similar models that are installed through the wall of a house. Window units can fit either double-hung or casement windows, while through-the-wall models can be installed nearly any place desired on an outside wall.

Both window and through-the-wall units are available in a wide range of cooling capacities.
