Beware Of Sneaky Snacker After Meals

Beware of the after-meal sneaky snacker. None of us like to throw food away. We are often tempted to eat the remaining piece of french toast or the spoonful of mashed potatoes because we do not want them to go to waste.

The problem is that those extra helpings can add inches to our own waistlines. In fact, you can easily add up to 500 calories to your daily food intake by consuming those little extras throughout the day.

If you find it hard to avoid the temptation to snack on leftovers, here are some suggestions:

Ask for family help in clearing the table after a meal. Keep a covered container in the freezer for leftover spoonfuls of vegetables, meats and gravies. Then use these to add to soups, rice or scrambled eggs.

Save leftovers for a planned snack or freeze single servings for your own TV dinners when someone needs to eat separately from the rest of the family.

Quality Check for Herbs and Spices

Herbs and spices can make a big difference in the flavor of the foods you prepare. But they don't hold that power forever. Check the power of your herb and spice supply by smelling them. If the aroma is still strong, the herb or spice will add flavor. But herbs and spices that have lost most of their aroma have also lost most of their flavor.

Most will keep for a year. Quality is lost more quickly when they are stored near heat or in a light place. So to preserve quality, choose a cool, dark storage spot.

When buying herbs and spices, think about how much you will use them. Purchase small quantities of those that are used less often. Larger size supplies may be a better buy, but it is a real savings only if they are used up while still fresh enough to add flavor.

When you get herbs and spices home from the store, mark the purchase date on them. Then you will have a time-guide for checking quality.

Freezer Costs
I hope there is no one reading this who thinks he is going to save a lot of money by having a home freezer. In fact, research shows the main advantage in having a freezer is its convenience. And, if you freeze food properly, you might have a better quality product than if you had canned these foods.

In addition, families who have a freezer may eat better all year round because the food is on hand. As far as saving a penny here or there, that will happen only if you get some food given to you, if you grow your own, or if you take advantage of sales.

Here's why. You have to buy the freezer and operate it all year round — full or not. And there's the costs of depreciation, repairs, electricity and the money for packaging materials.

JSTC Hosts Regional Counselors Workshop

James Sprunt Technical College hosted a workshop Sept. 7 sponsored by the Carolinas Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers. The workshop was to acquaint high school counselors with the curricula and services available at various colleges in the region and to update their knowledge of student financial aid.

Thirty-five high school guidance counselors from Duplin and surrounding counties met with representatives from 45 public and private colleges in North Carolina.

Dr. Bruce I. Howell, president of Wake Technical College in Raleigh and former president of Sampson Technical College in Clinton, delivered the keynote address on Higher Education in the 80s. Other speakers were George Dixon, associate director of admissions at State University in Raleigh; Walter Jacobs, associate director, Southern Regional office of the College Board; Dr. Paul Marion, assistant vice-president for student services and special programs, N.C. University System; and Dr. W. Burkett Raper, president of Mount Olive College. Charles Hendricks, associate director of admissions for Guilford College, presided over a luncheon held at The Country Squire.

Mrs. Rita Brown, director of admissions at JSTC, official hostess for the group, stated that the workshop was well received by the participants and the information they gained would be of benefit to their students as they plan for their future education.

Duplin Brandy To Be Bottled This Year

A bottle of the first legal brandy produced in North Carolina since prohibition was enacted in the state in 1909 was presented to Marvin Speight, chairman of the N.C. Alcoholic Board of Control in Raleigh Tuesday.

Called "Duplin Brandy" distilled by Duplin Wine Cellars of Rose Hill, the new product was presented to Speight by David Fussell, president of the farmer-owned cooperative winery, several grape producers and state Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham. According to Fussell, marketing of the brandy began earlier this month and can be purchased in some state ABC stores for $6.85.

"We are still in the experimental stages with the brandy," Fussell said, "but we intend to bottle about 3,000 gallons of it this year."

The brandy is exclusively a Tar Heel product. It is distilled from wine made from North Carolina-grown muscadine grapes which include such varieties as Carlos, Magnolia and Scuppernong.

"Scuppernongs were the first cultivated grapes in America," Fussell said. "They were discovered by early colonists on Roanoke Island. The name 'Scuppernong' comes from the algonquian Indian language meaning 'sweet tree.'"

Fussell feels that his and other wineries in North Carolina will give a major boost to the state's fledgling grape industry.

"For North Carolina to have a healthy grape market, brandy as well as wine must be produced to utilize surplus grapes," he said.

Latest figures show North Carolina citizens consume about 1.2 gallons a person or 7.5 million gallons a year. Fussell believes that if state wineries had 10 percent of that market, they would use all grapes presently grown in the state.

Commissioner Graham said that developing the grape industry is a priority with the N.C. Department of Agriculture. "We are highly interested in making the state a leader in grape production. It is one more step in increasing the diversification of our agriculture."
