Psychiatrist
Ian C. Wilson
Dies

Dr. Ian C. Wilson, 61, a psychiatrist and mental health researcher, died of a heart attack while driving to his Garner home Friday.

Wilson was returning from his job at the Duplin County Mental Health Center when he was stricken near Clinton at about 6:45 p.m. His car came to a stop in a ditch on the side of the road.

Born in Scotland and educated in Edinburgh and England, Wilson was a research psychiatrist for the state mental health division from 1963 to 1979. He published many papers of mental health therapy and drugs. He was best known for his research on hormones implicated in schizophrenia and depression and for research on inherited mental illness.

Wilson was the 1981 recipient of the Eugene A. Hargrove Mental Health Research Award, given by the N.C. Foundation for Mental Health Research.

He is survived by his wife, Janet Gedded Wilson; two sons, Gordon Wilson and Graham Wilson of Raleigh; two daughters, Margaret Hewitt and Anita Wilson of Raleigh; and one grandchild.
