Care For Boxwood Shrubs

By Philip J. Denlinger
Assistant AES agent

Nematodes and root rot in boxwood are more serious than mites. The problem is that once you have these diseases, they cannot be chemically controlled. These must be prevented at planting time. Buy healthy plants and avoid planting in poorly drained soil. In clay soils, set boxwood in raised beds with pine bark incorporated into the soil around each plant.

If you suspect that you have either one of these diseases, take about a pint of soil along with some roots from around the plant. Bring this sample in a plastic bag to the Duplin County Agricultural Extension office. If the problem is already known to exist either replant with a resistant type of shrub or fumigate the plant bed.

For more information, contact Phil Denlinger at the AES office at 296-1996 in Kenansville.

Local Public Health News

Her baby was dead in the backseat of the family car and the young mother was put in jail for negligent homicide. What had she done? She'd left her baby in a locked car with the windows rolled up in the blazing heat of summer.

Every year, cases like this occur across the country. And now, in North Carolina, with temperatures rising into the 90's and 100's, the risk of unnecessary death or disability for children is great.

A child should never be left in a car unattended, but when temperatures rise to the extremes they reach in summer, even a few minutes can result in central nervous system damage or death.

Temperatures inside a car left parked in the sun can rise to well over 100 degrees even on a relatively mild day with temperatures in the 70s. They can go even higher when outdoor temperatures are extremely hot.

Even a few minutes in a closed automobile can cost a child its life. If any individual sees a child alone in a closed car, they should first attempt to lower the windows and stay with the child. If the car is locked, they should contact the police as quickly as possible. Prompt action could save the child's life.

Children are more susceptible to heat than adults, and the smaller the child, the more susceptible he or she is. A child's body temperature will rise very quickly in hot weather. Even if a child in a closed car is reached before extremes in temperature can lead to death, permanent central nervous system damage could result.

Because of susceptibility to heat, health officials offer basic general guidelines to all parents to help their small children cope with the hot sweater; dress children in as little clothing as possible; make sure that clothes are loose fitting; make sure that children get plenty of liquids and have frequent opportunities for rest periods.

Older children involved in organized sports activities also need fluid and rest breaks to prevent being overcome by heat.

Water, juices and milk are good liquids to replace body fluids lost to excessive perspiration.

Infants and toddlers have extremely sun-sensitive skin. Even limited exposure to intense sunlight such as at the beach or at a pool can result in severe sunburn. Sunburn can make it more difficult for a child or an adult to bear up under extremely hot temperatures. Infants should be kept under umbrellas or in shade as much as possible during outdoor activities.
