

Teachey Receives Plaque

At their regular meeting in January, the James Sprunt Technical College educational office personnel organization presented Ms. Vivial Teachey with an engraved plaque of appreciation for her dedicated service to the EOP organization. The award honored Ms. Teachey for her service as treasurer to District 13, a seven-county division of the state organization, an office she has held for two terms, 1981-82 and 1982-83. She is also a past president of the JSTC EOP. The Educational Office Personnel organization is comprised of secretarial, clerical and other educational support staff at JSTC. They are a part of the state organization, which has over 2,600 active members. "We are very pleased to give Vivian this award," said EOP President Lydia Rector. "She has been a great asset to our group and one of our hardest-working members." Ms. Teachey, left, is pictured above receiving the award plaque from Rector.

Along The Way

By Emily Killete

Pieces of Duplin's history are recorded in many issues of the DUPLIN TIMES. A supplement to the May 9, 1968 DUPLIN TIMES carried a variety of historical facts about the county and announced the opening of the restored plantation home of the Kenan family.

The articles for the supplement were written by J. Graves. The article, "Kenansville was Camping Ground for Indians" gave a brief historical look at the county.

"Indian mounds show Kenansville was a camping ground for the county's original inhabitants. And the community has persevered through Revolutionary frays, forays by Union troops bent on burning and a time of decline when it was said 'neither the cry of a baby nor the sound of a hammer was held.'

First called the Golden Grove settlement, Kenansville was part of the 132,000 acres given by royal grant in 1736 to a rich London merchant, Henry McCulloch. Settlers were mainly Scots-Irish, who established the first Presbyterian community in North Carolina. Many of their names — Dickson, Pearsall, Sloan, McIntire, Gillespie — are among the headstones at the Roulledge one mile east of town, one of the oldest graveyards in the section. Kenansville became the county seat after 1784 when Sampson County separated from its Duplin parent. Daniel Teachey was one of the commissioners named to find a new court house site, since the first court house, located just about three miles west of Warsaw, remained in Sampson County.

The commissioners were evenly divided between Kenansville and Sarecta, the home of Dr. William Houston, one of Henry McCulloch's land agents. Dr. Houston was later appointed Crown Stamp Master for North Carolina, but resigned without executing his commission, amidst much opposition to the tax measure. Gen. James Kenan, who lived on his Turkey Branch plantation near Warsaw, cast the deciding vote for Kenansville as the county seat. Later the town was named in his honor.

Land for the new county seat was donated by Capt. James Pearsall in 1784 and the court house was built the following year on a four-acre square 50 feet below Pearsall's spring.

Tax to provide funds for the new building was one shilling on every 100 pounds of taxable property, or one shilling on every poll not possession 100 pounds of taxable property for two years.

Before the War Between the States, many Dutch settlers located in the western section of Kenansville and that part of town was called 'Dutch Town' for many years.

For a long time Kenansville was the only town between Goldsboro and Wilmington that could boast of a public library.

Education was emphasized in Presbyterian settlements and public opinion demanded that children be taught to read and write. Cartered four years before the University of North Carolina, the Grove Academy was opened in 1785. Established to 'fit young men for college or to prepare them for the ordinary walks of life,' it operated for 122 years, although not continuously, until it was discontinued about 1907.

The Kenansville Seminary, later known as the Webster Institute, was organized about 1856 according to a deed from Dr. Needham W. Herring to the trustees. The seminary was later purchased by Professor R.W. Millard who operated it for many years.

Dr. James W. Blount and Henry Farrior founded a Presbyterian boarding school for girls in 1896. Originally called the Presbyterian Female Institute, the name was later changed to the James Sprunt Institute, honoring Dr. James Sprunt, Presbyterian pastor in Kenansville for more than 30 years.
