Buying Clothes for Someone Else

Buying clothes for someone else may not be as easy as it sounds. But you can avoid some pitfalls by planning ahead.

One way to be a smart shopper is to get the person to talk about what clothing styles and colors he likes. And listen to what he says. After all, you are going to shop for him, not for yourself.

As you shop, think about the person you are buying for. And try to answer these questions: Does the person need this? Will this item fit into his wardrobe? Is this a color or style that he would choose?

Be especially careful of size and fit. Some clothes need to fit well. If you are selecting a dress shirt, you will need to know collar size and sleeve length. If it is pants you are buying, you will need to know waist and inseam sizes.

If you are shopping for someone who lives close by, you might suggest window-shopping together. And if the person sees something he likes, ask him to try it on. Then ask the clerk to hold the article.

There are some clothing items that are just hard to buy for another person, so you might want to steer clear of these. For example, some men are mighty particular about their ties and socks. Also try to find out if the person you are shopping for has any allergies. It would be a shame to buy a wool shirt or sweater for someone who is allergic to wool.

Of course, there is a simple way to solve the clothing questions. Use gift certificates. Just make sure the certificate is large enough to pay for the item you want the person to buy.
