

Voters To Decide Constitutional Amendment

Citizens of North Carolina will be voting on more than just candidates in the primaries May 8. An amendment to the N.C. Constitution creating an agency to issue revenue bonds to finance agricultural projects will also be decided.

In recent years industrial, manufacturing and pollution control facilities, health care facilities and housing, and public power facilities have all joined the list of proper purposes for State borrowing through the issuance of revenue bonds. The proposed amendment to the constitution would add to this list agricultural projects.

A complete explanation of the amendment and how it will work is available in a new pamphlet issued by the Department of the Secretary of State. Titled "An Explanation of the Proposed Amendment to the N.C. Constitution to Create an Agency to Issue Revenue Bonds to Finance Agricultural Projects to be Voted on in the Primary Election on May 8, 1984," the pamphlet is available from the county Board of Elections in each county.

Hoping to make citizens more aware of proposed amendments, the General Assembly created the Constitutional Amendments Publication Commission. The three-member body is composed of the Secretary of State, chairman, the Attorney General and the Legislative Services officer.

Sixty days prior to an election in which a constitutional issue will be voted on, this commission must prepare an explanation of the issue in "simple and commonly used language." The explanation is printed by the Secretary of State and distributed to the county boards of election and to anyone else who might request a copy.

Secretary of State Eure, a long-time advocate of the citizens' need to be informed, feels that this new service will aid N.C. citizens in making a more effective decision on the amendment.

Phillips To Manage Thornburg Campaign

David T. Phillips of Kenansville has been named as manager of the Duplin County Thornburg for Attorney General campaign.

Judge Lacy Thornburg, 54, is the Democratic nominee for the attorney general's post. He faces no opposition in the May primary.

In addition to the completion of campaign organizations in all of N.C.'s 100 counties, Thornburg's election efforts have been boosted by the announcement of three key endorsements. He has recently been endorsed by the 52,000-member

N.C. Association of Educators, the 145,000-member N.C. State AFL-CIO and the General Baptist State Convention.

A three-term state legislator and veteran Superior Court judge, Thornburg seeks to replace present Attorney General Rufus Edmisten, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for governor.

"I want to make the office of attorney general the best possible example of honest, hard-working and responsible state government," Thornburg said.
