. Among the Washoe Indians of Neever, would hardly care to be the star of such a feast, for the guest of honor is allowed to eat nothing at all for four days previous.

On the fourth night the dance starts at about eight o'clock, and sometimes ing. The Indians form a circle, joining hands, aild move by short side steps in a ring, humming a sort of change without words or meaning.

The girl, accompanied by an elder woman as a sort of chaperon, and carrying a long staff to support her because of the weakness induced by her long fast, weaves in and out of the dance joining in the step.

night the girl's family give money and other possessions to the dancers to keep them moving and to induce others to join in. . The greater the numper of dancers the greater the popularity of the family. Shortly after midnight a feast is given by the girl's relatives, and all participate.

The ceremony closes at sunrise when the girl is taken to her tepee and attired in bunches of sagebrush in which money is concealed. She appears before the assembled dancers outside and throws the money to them amid a wild scramble. A can of water is then deshed; ever her head; as the concluding ceremony, after which she
