Meanwhile, the British admiralty's interest in the Arctic regions, which had been dormant for half a century, began to revive under the leadership of Sir John Barrow, secretary of the navy. An expedition was organized under the command of Captain Buchan of the Dorothea, in which Lieutenant Franklin was invited to join, taking charge of the Trent. It ended unfortunately for the Dorothea, and Franklin returned, convoying a dam-

Tried a Third Time. All England was afire with the desire to know what lay to the north and west of Hudson bay. Maps indicated two rivers, the Mackenzie and the Coppermine, but of the indentures of the coast between their estuaries nothing had been learned. The following year Franklin was ordered to traverse the land lying between Hudson bay and the Arctic sea. Three years of hardship followed, but the party returned triumphant, having descended the Coppermine to its mouth. When next he sailed, he was Commander Franklin. That time he penetrated still further, reaching Mackenbay. The commander himself sailed along the unfriendly coast, while Doctor Richardson was detailed to journey in an eastwardly direction, exploring the coast to the mouth of the Coppermine. This second Arctic voyage was not to be followed by another until 20 years later, when he undertook the one that was to prove

Mistaken Identity

Sir Walter Raleigh, formerly professor of English at Oxford university, whose book of delightful "Letters" is something not to be missed, loved to tell this story:

"It was at Cleveland, Ohio, that a local reporter met the train on which I arrived from New York. Not knowing me, he looked around for some one answering his conception of an Englishman. Having selected a victiman American, by the way, who had never heard of me-the scribe stopped him and said: 'Are you Sir Walter Raleigh?' With a pitying look, the stranger replied: 'No, you'll find Sir Walter Raleigh in the club car playing poker with Queen Elizabeth!' It is only fair to the reporter to state that he later ran me to earth and told me the story."-Exchange.

Money From the Water

A child playing with its mother's purse while being wheeled over Memorial bridge, Portsmouth, N. H., tossed a new $10 bill to the wind, which carried it to the water below. Four days later a marine orderly on the navy yard ferry saw a $10 bill near the end of a floating stage in about three feet of water. He fished it out and went in search of the ownit to her.
