Stonington Folks Claim Antarctic Discovered By Local Sea Captain

By Leo Dotolo
 STONINGTON, Conn. (AP)—Folks in this little fishing village are at a loss to explain why the United States Government does not stake official claim on the Antarctic region. They say it was discovered by a Stonington sea captain, Nathaniel B. Palmer of the sloop Hero in 1821 while on a seal hunting expedition in the South Shetland Islands.

Accounts current here say that as the Hero was returning north, a dense fog set in. The Hero was hoisted to allow clearing weather. When the fog lifted, two Russian war ships appeared, and a party from the fleet immediately boarded the American sloop. After a short visit Capt. F. Von Bellingshausen, later the honored Admiral Von Bellingshausen, asked to see the ship's log and charts. They were examined in silence. Then the Russian captain arose and exclaimed, "What do I see, what do I hear from a boy in his teens?"

"That he is commander of a tiny boat the size of the launch of my frigate, in which he has pushed his way to the pole through storm and ice; has sought and found the point I, in command of one of the best pointed fleets at the disposal of my august master, have for three long years searched day and night for." Then placing his hand on Palmer's head he continued: "What shall I say to my master? But, be that as it may, my grief is your joy. Wear your laurels with my sincere prayers for your welfare. I name the land you have discovered in your honor, noble boy, 'Palmer Land'."

Chapter 15
 SOPHIE asked Johanson to eat breakfast with them and he accepted with alacrity, evidently feeling no qualms about usurping Manny's place at the head of the table. Even though his presence was a reminder that the house was under guard, his friendliness and interesting conversation took the minds of those present off the murder.

Chapter 16
 "CAME the dawn," said Johanson, "Came the dawn but twelve hours late."
 "I suppose by that you mean that last night's fire and the knocking-out of Warner were simply to cover up the removal of Hugh?" Vince said.

Chapter 17
 "I met Eric a second mate of a vessel taking on cargo for the China trade and he was to be in Honolulu only two weeks. We made those two weeks cover the pleasure of two months and at the end of them Eric asked me to marry him. I was to give him my answer the night before sailing."
 "Simeon of course was furious. I tried to make him see Eric's true worth but he wouldn't listen and I was too madly in love to care what he thought. Eric and our future was my one thought. I waited for Eric that last night but he never came. Instead it was Luki, then a small boy of eight, who brought me a note. I can see it now—'Dear Sophie: I have come to the conclusion that with such a difference in our backgrounds we could never find true happiness together. I sail at dawn and hope the thought of the past two weeks will always be a pleasant memory to you as it will to me—Eric Branson.'"

Chapter 18
 "I couldn't believe it. It meant the end of everything for me. I could never love another man as I had Eric and when Simeon told me that Eric's ship had been lost in a typhoon, I knew I would never marry. And then tonight the past rose up and I knew what had happened thirty-seven years ago."
 "Simeon had written one note and signed it Eric, why couldn't he have written two, the other signature Sophie?"
 "Oh Heaven, that such selfishness could exist!"

Chapter 19
 "Now I see Simeon for what he is, a cold-blooded sensualist, a peevish man who has gone through life gratifying himself yet denying Hugh and me the right to live as normal human beings. Such people must atone for their sins. They must not be

Chapter 20
 "I wonder, I found this tucked in the comforter on her bed. 'She certainly had a motive. What a skunk that Manny must have been!'"
 "There's only one catch," Vince pointed out. "Sophie is no fool. If she had done it, would she have left such an incriminating letter that she could have shared except for Manny's interference?"
 "Then Sophie isn't our murderer," Vince felt strangely relieved.

Chapter 21
 "No, but there's plenty she can tell. Good Lord! What a mess!"
 "The sound that caused Johanson to break into a stream of Norse invective was a thin high-pitched oriental wail. It came from the terrace and was repeated again and again."

Chapter 22
 "I wonder, I found this tucked in the comforter on her bed. 'She certainly had a motive. What a skunk that Manny must have been!'"
 "There's only one catch," Vince pointed out. "Sophie is no fool. If she had done it, would she have left such an incriminating letter that she could have shared except for Manny's interference?"
 "Then Sophie isn't our murderer," Vince felt strangely relieved.

Chapter 23
 "No, but there's plenty she can tell. Good Lord! What a mess!"
 "The sound that caused Johanson to break into a stream of Norse invective was a thin high-pitched oriental wail. It came from the terrace and was repeated again and again."

J. P. Rittenberry Lives On Eggs

J. P. Rittenberry likes eggs. He likes 'em so well he eats 'em morning, noon and night and virtually nothing else. For more than a year now, the elderly widower and caretaker of a cotton gin has eaten fried eggs, sunny-side up, at every meal, topped off by coffee and toast or plain bread.

He consumes three to four fried eggs each breakfast, lunch and dinner, Monday through Saturday. On Sunday, Rittenberry eats four fried eggs for each meal.

Rittenberry has all his meals in one cafe here. When he walks in, the waitress never bothers to ask what he wants. She knows. There's one thing about sticking with the same order for each meal. Rittenberry gets quicker service and he doesn't have to mull over a menu.

He pays 10 cents per egg. The cafe has kept a record of Rittenberry's diet and reported that during 1947, he ate 4,058 eggs or 289 dozen. His bill was $405.80.

HAUNTED HOLIDAY

By Cameron Dockery

Chapter 15
 SOPHIE asked Johanson to eat breakfast with them and he accepted with alacrity, evidently feeling no qualms about usurping Manny's place at the head of the table. Even though his presence was a reminder that the house was under guard, his friendliness and interesting conversation took the minds of those present off the murder.

Chapter 16
 "CAME the dawn," said Johanson, "Came the dawn but twelve hours late."
 "I suppose by that you mean that last night's fire and the knocking-out of Warner were simply to cover up the removal of Hugh?" Vince said.

Chapter 17
 "I met Eric a second mate of a vessel taking on cargo for the China trade and he was to be in Honolulu only two weeks. We made those two weeks cover the pleasure of two months and at the end of them Eric asked me to marry him. I was to give him my answer the night before sailing."
 "Simeon of course was furious. I tried to make him see Eric's true worth but he wouldn't listen and I was too madly in love to care what he thought. Eric and our future was my one thought. I waited for Eric that last night but he never came. Instead it was Luki, then a small boy of eight, who brought me a note. I can see it now—'Dear Sophie: I have come to the conclusion that with such a difference in our backgrounds we could never find true happiness together. I sail at dawn and hope the thought of the past two weeks will always be a pleasant memory to you as it will to me—Eric Branson.'"

Chapter 18
 "I couldn't believe it. It meant the end of everything for me. I could never love another man as I had Eric and when Simeon told me that Eric's ship had been lost in a typhoon, I knew I would never marry. And then tonight the past rose up and I knew what had happened thirty-seven years ago."
 "Simeon had written one note and signed it Eric, why couldn't he have written two, the other signature Sophie?"
 "Oh Heaven, that such selfishness could exist!"

Chapter 19
 "Now I see Simeon for what he is, a cold-blooded sensualist, a peevish man who has gone through life gratifying himself yet denying Hugh and me the right to live as normal human beings. Such people must atone for their sins. They must not be
