Coastal Area Prepares for Big Fourth Celebration

OCRACOKE ISLAND, N. C., July 1 — The Islanders of Ocracoke rounded out plans today for a lusty Fourth of July celebration.

Indications are that it will be the biggest merry-making spree in the island's history.

As befitting the spirit of the occasion, the memorable date of American independence will be observed first in prayer and worship.

Since the Fourth falls on Sunday, services commemorating freedom's birth will be held twice this coming Sabbath at the Ocracoke Methodist church.

Dr. Charles Tilley, pastor of the local church and circuit-riding preacher of the Outer Banks, will speak at 11 a.m. on "Moses—the First Great Emancipator," and at 8 p.m. on "God, America and The World."

The revelry will come Monday.

And there will be a band—Ocracoke's own.

With flags flying from nearby buildings, the island residents and their friends will gather at the U. S. Coast Guard base at 1 p.m. to inaugurate the festivities.

Following the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" there will be a picnic lunch.

Then will come the main event—a softball game between the Coast Guard and the rapidly rising "Nine Old Men"—a team composed of the married men of the island.

Dogged by "Charley Horses," busted thumbs and the flight of youth, the "Nine Old Men" will go into the game slight favorites nevertheless. They will be out to win their fourth straight victory.

There is also a possibility a second game will be played between the Coast Guard and the Young Men of the Island.

Plans also call for a volley ball game during the afternoon.

Jesse Garrish is chairman of the recreation committee and will captain the "Nine Old Men" team.

The program committee is under the direction of Wabab Howard.

Travis Williams and Sid Tolson are in charge of the picnic and will be assisted by the Women's Society of Christian service which will see to preparation of the food.

M. Leslie Davis, Beaufort, Conducts Tour Through Ann Street Cemetery

Following the meeting of the Beaufort Cemetery Restoration association Wednesday afternoon, M. Leslie Davis took visitors on a tour of Ann Street cemetery, which the association is restoring.

Many outstanding notables of local history are buried in the old cemetery. Capt. Josiah Pender, who built the old Atlantic hotel, lies there as do the "Big Four" of Beaufort businessmen many years back. The "Big Four" were Thomas Duncan, Isaac Ramsey, J. P. C. Davis, and B. L. Perry.

Also buried there is Rev. Bridges Arendell, after whom Arendell street in Morehead City is named, and Jacob Shepard, whose family owned Shepard's Point.

Col. William Thompson, another of the cemetery's notables, was a soldier of the Revolution. He led a contingent into New Bern and was later made brigadier general, although he was always known as "colonel." He later became a member of the legislature.

One of the old legends of the cemetery is about an English soldier, his name unknown, who was buried in an upright position. The soldier, who is believed to have died before the Revolution, occupies a four by four plot.

Another soldier lying there is Col. Augustus Thompson who served in the Revolutionary War.

Capt. Otway Burns, who was commander of the American privateer, "Snap Dragon," is interred in the cemetery and tradition says that the cannon above his grave was one of those used on the "Snap Dragon." Another famous sea captain in the cemetery is Capt. Christian Wulff who served in the Royal Danish Navy.
